While Judge BUTLER was devoted to his country and to the welfare of the entire Nation, his chief concern, naturally, was to represent his beloved State and the people of the great western region. Actuated with this thought, he acquainted himself with the problems of that part of the United States which he represented. He made it his business to advance the welfare of that section before the committees of Congress and upon the floor of the House, and his labors were marked by high efficiency and thorough knowledge of the problems with which he was confronted.

He was a man of direct action, straightforward in his conversation and speech, and sought always to uphold the dignity of the State and Nation he represented.

Death is not to be feared; it is the next step after life and is a part of the great plan and scheme of the Creator of the Universe under which we all have our being. It is not how or when we die that counts, but rather our attitude toward life and how much we accomplish while living. Judged by that standard my friend lived a complete life. Death is the inevitable course of life, but when it comes so early it always seems saddest. It is not the death that causes our sorrow; it is the cutting short of a life of such potential possibilities. Could the Angel of Death have spared him longer I am sure the people he loved and served so well would have been even more greatly benefited and enriched by the service of his mature years. The death of my friend Judge BUTLER brought sadness to his colleagues and was a distinct loss to the House of Representatives, of which he was a conspicuous and distinguished Member.

I recall the words of Webster:

If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble to the dust. But if we work on men's immortal minds, if we imbue them with high principles, with the just fear of God and love of their fellow men, we engrave on those tablets something which not time can efface and which will brighten to all eternity.

Viewed in this light, life is a holy and sacred thing; "It is a spiritual drama, not a biological episode." In that drama Judge BUTLER played his part well.

Pale sorrow leads us closer to our kind,
And in the serious hours of life we find
Depths in the souls of men which lend new worth
And majesty to this brief span of earth.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, our friend and colleague, ROBERT REYBURN BUTLER, has passed from this life. Weary with honest toil, he laid himself down to rest and soon entered the sleep that knows no waking.

Those who were privileged to know Judge BUTLER loved him. A man of few words, and those soft-spoken except when aroused, he did not attempt to force himself upon others as is the custom of some in public life. He was no back-slapper, but he would go halfway to meet the friendly advances of any man. For those who held his confidence there burned a true and steady flame of affection and a warmth of regard that made him a real friend in every sense of the word.

I served with him on the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and our acquaintance there begun grew to something more in the years that followed. On that same committee I had also served with his distinguished predecessor, the late Nicholas J. Sinnott. There was much that was akin in spirit and character between these two men, as if the great Northwest from whence they came had put its imprint indelibly upon them. Coming from the land of high mountains and mighty rivers, there certainly was nothing small or mean in the lives of these men. Lofty in purpose as they were tall in statue, they looked out over life oblivious of its pettiness.

Judge BUTLER loved humanity. He understood his people. He thought of his constituents as his friends and neighbors. His sympathy went out to them through all this period of trial and tribulation. He fought for them earnestly and courageously, although unavailingly, because the economic and financial ills of the country had their root far deeper than political remedies could reach. He forgave his people that they could not understand this. He forgave them when they blamed Congress for distressing conditions created not by Congress but by racketeers in industry and finance. He forgave them when in their despair and suffering they sought a new leadership. In his defeat he felt no tinge of bitterness. Philosophically he remarked to me that public office belonged to the people—it was theirs to give and it was theirs to take away.

And now his spirit is free to return to the land he loved—the land of which he was so much a part—the West, of which the poet sang:

Out where the handclasp's a little stronger,
Out where the smile dwells a little longer,
That's where the West begins;
Out where the sun is a little brighter,
Where the snows that fall are a trifle whiter,
Where the bonds of home are a wee bit tighter,
That's where the West begins.

Out where the skies are a trifle bluer,
Out where friendship's a little truer,
That's where the West begins;
Out where a fresher breeze is blowing,
Where there's laughter in every streamlet flowing,
Where there's more of reaping and less of sowing,
That's where the West begins.

Out where the world is in the making,
Where fewer hearts in despair are aching,
That's where the West begins;
Where there's more of singing and less of sighing,
Where there's more of giving and less of buying,
And a man makes friends without half trying—
That's where the West begins.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, under the privilege of extending my remarks I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to my late colleague from Oregon, the Hon. ROBERT R. BUTLER.

ROBERT REYBURN BUTLER, Representative of the second congressional district of Oregon, who died January 7, 1933, in Washington, D. C., played a prominent rôle in the life of his adopted State for a quarter of a century. Orator, scholar, a judicial mind, and deep sympathy with the views and problems of the common man, Congressman BUTLER possessed many fine qualities.

Of the 51 years of his span of life 26 were spent as an adopted son of Oregon.

It was in the little hamlet of Butler, Tenn., named for his forefathers, on September 24, 1881, that Judge BUTLER first saw the light of day. His early education was received in the hill schools of his native State, and after being admitted to the bar at the age of 22 years he practiced his profession in Tennessee for three years. Then he moved to Oregon where he became one of the best known men of the judiciary.

In the little town of Condon he established himself in 1906. Scarcely had the young Tennesseean hung out his shingle than the tall, soft-spoken young lawyer, with the politeness of the southern gentleman, began to attract attention due to his brilliancy of mind and his natural oratory.

During the political campaign of 1908 the future Congressman stumped the State and became a Republican presidential elector, and when in the following year he was appointed to the circuit bench by the then governor, the Hon. George Earle Chamberlain,, who later distinguished himself in the United States Senate, our late colleague became one of the youngest circuit judges in the history of Oregon.

After three years of distinguished service on the bench he resigned and went to The Dalles, Oreg., to live. But the desire to serve again overcame him, and in 1911 he was elected State senator from Wasco and Hood River Counties, serving four years in the Oregon Legislature.

His activities continued, and again he was named as a presidential elector in 1916, touring the State in the interest of the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes.

After that campaign, until 1925 when he was elected once more to the State legislature, his private practice demanded his full attention. A movement was started to have Judge BUTLER become a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States Senator in 1926, but at the same time friends of the Hon. FREDERICK STEIWER, who also came from the eastern Oregon district, started a boom. Realizing that the party would suffer if two candidates from the same section were in the field, Judge BUTLER eliminated himself by withdrawing.

With the resignation of the beloved Nick Sinnott as Representative of the second congressional district to accept appointment on the Court of Claims, Judge BUTLER was the choice of his party for the unexpired term of Judge Sinnott. He defeated the Democratic opponent and in 1930 was elected to Congress to succeed himself.

In Congress the duties of Judge BUTLER were many, augmented by the fact that his district is one of the largest in the United States and required constant attention.

Reclamation gave him much concern for the great Owyhee project is in the second congressional district of Oregon. He spent much time over the problems of the national forests, grazing lands, highways in public lands, and Indian affairs, as well as agriculture, for each was of particular interest to his constituents.

The development of the Columbia River was one of his hopes and desires and he was untiring in his efforts to bring attention to the possibilities of that famous river for irrigation, navigation, and power. He sponsored several bills having these objects.

He advocated open-river navigation for the Columbia, pending the wait for Federal construction of dams to create still water and power.

Always the polished gentleman, our late colleague was one of the most scholarly men Oregon ever sent to the Congress. Retiring and of a sensitive nature, he was said to prefer sitting with a friend or two discussing literature, the law, or public questions to mixing miscellaneously with strangers. The keynotes of his library were the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron, whether he was in the Nation's Capital or in The Dalles.

His memory was uncanny for instantly he could quote from the Bible, an act from Shakespeare, an essential part of a Government report, or a poem of many stanzas. In this respect he was likened to his old friend, Nicholas J. Sinnott, his predecessor in the Congress.

It was said of him he had few equals in Oregon as an orator, and each address was carefully thought out and prepared. Politically he always was a Republican with progressive leanings, and one of his most noted political characteristics was that he could not be stampeded.

Judge BUTLER is survived by his 74-year-old mother, who still resides in Butler, Tenn., and a daughter, Elizabeth Anabelle Butler, who is attending the University of Oregon.

SAMUEL A. KENDALL

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, no words of mine can adequately and fully describe the high esteem in which our departed colleague, SAMUEL A. KENDALL, was held by all who knew him. It is said the richest possession a person may acquire is the confidence, respect, and esteem of our friends and acquaintances. He had all of these, and his memory is enshrined in the hearts of the people of his district, by his former colleagues in this House, and his host of friends in Washington and throughout the country.

We mourn the loss of a man of fine character, of a friendly, jovial nature, a man of broad human sympathy, whose heart was full of love and charity for his fellow men.

SAM KENDALL was an ardent champion of whatever cause he espoused. He was straightforward, courageous, and honest in his views. While not an eloquent orator, his direct and forceful presentation of any subject carried conviction and always commanded the respect and attention of the House.

In the 14 years of his service in Washington Mr. KENDALL rendered conspicuous and noteworthy service, not alone to the interests of his constituency, to whom he was always faithful and loyal, but in a much wider field of endeavor. Due to his membership on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for many years, he was especially interested in postal legislation and the welfare of postal employees and was the author and sponsor of legislation in their interest.

SAM KENDALL loved his native State. He succeeded me as president of the Pennsylvania Society of Washington, D. C., in which capacity he served with distinction during the year 1932.

Our association during the 14 years we served together in Congress was most pleasant, and I deeply mourn the loss of a good friend with whom I was happy to serve.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, although I have been a Member of this House for only two years, in that time I have learned to know and respect a great number of my colleagues from all parts of the United States. Sad to say, a great many of them have passed on since I first made their acquaintance.

One of these, and one from my own State of Pennsylvania, though from an opposite corner of that State and registered under a different party, was becoming a real close friend, when he, too, was but recently called away.

This man, SAMUEL AUSTIN KENDALL, whom I am honored to have called my good friend, was born on a farm in Somerset County, Pa., and although when reaching maturity he left the State for college and spent a number of years teaching in the West, he returned to his native State in 1890 to engage in lumbering and mining, and was elected to the State legislature to represent his home county of Somerset. He was elected to this House for the Sixty-sixth Congress, where he served until his recent sad and untimely passing on, so soon after that of his loving and faithful wife.

The name of SAM KENDALL was legion throughout the State of Pennsylvania for the wonderful aid and encouragement he gave to the laboring man, the miner, the farmer, and the everyday worker; especially was he a staunch champion of the postal workers of the State and the Nation.

It is one of the sad experiences of public life that one's close intercourse with a colleague is cut so short just as one is becoming to know him and to know the true man back of the casual meeting with him as a legislator. Such was my case with SAM KENDALL. This was brought more keenly to my attention on my visit to Mr. KENDALL'S home as one of the funeral committee of the House. There I had the opportunity of seeing just how much my good friend SAM KENDALL was loved and missed in his own home, and we all know how he has and will be missed here.

The House and the country can ill spare such a conscientious, earnest public servant. We are all saddened at his sudden departure.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to have served in the Seventy-second Congress in the House of Representatives with my very dear friend and colleague the Hon. SAMUEL A. KENDALL.

I never knew Mr. KENDALL until I met him one day, in the summer of 1931, when I made a day's visit to the office I had assigned to me in the House Office Building. He came to the office, having heard that I was down for the day, and offered to be of service to me in the event that I might need some help from one experienced.

I was so impressed with his sincerity and kindness that from that day on a friendship sprang up between us that lasted until the day of his death. I was fortunate in being assigned to the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, of which he was an honored member, and it was a pleasure to be associated with him in the work of that committee. While we differed politically, no differences ever seemed to change our respect for one another and in his passing I felt a great loss. He was deeply concerned about his country and always manifested a spirit that should characterize a truly great citizen. While our associations were for but a short period of time, I learned to love and respect him. At no time did he ever say an unkind word concerning anyone, and his love for his colleagues seemed to be limited only to the number with whom he served on both sides of the aisle. In his departure, Pennsylvania lost a fine legislator, of unusual ability, and the Nation lost a valuable servant. Death left unfinished the contribution he might have made in the last days of the session of Congress, but I feel sure that the materials he sent in advance of his going to that land beyond, will erect for him a glorious mansion. I hope we shall meet again in that spirit world.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, the death of SAMUEL AUSTIN KENDALL is the loss of an honest type of public servant. His record in Congress placed him among the able Representatives of his time. His early training as teacher in public schools and as professor in the higher branches of scholastic studies qualified him to be an able legislator. His successful business career in industries and railroads, also as a member of the State legislature, gave him a wide source of information and ability which enabled him conscientiously to represent his constituency in Congress. He was a student of economic questions, familiar with polite literature of the ages, and enjoyed an acute knowledge of the affairs of his State. Simplicity always prevails in a noble nature, and this trait of character formed his policies. He had high regard for public virtue. His record in Congress tended to weld the principles of our Government, thereby leaving a public heritage to the American people.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly of the life and public service of my friend and colleague, the Hon. SAMUEL A. KENDALL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KENDALL and I were elected to the House of Representatives at the same time, he from Pennsylvania, and I from New York. In the following Congress I joined him on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and from that time on, until his death 12 years later, we served together on that committee, divided politically but working unitedly in the interests of the Postal Service.

He started out as a school-teacher and rose to the post of superintendent and director of schools. He progressed to the lumber and mining trades; then he broadened his activities by engaging in the banking and railroad fields. He became a member of the City Council of Meyersdale, Pa., and then of the Pennsylvania State Legislature. This wide experience and training were of direct benefit in fitting him for the work of the Post Office Committee, where he was, particularly in his later years, associated with the committee's biggest and most important undertakings.

Mr. KENDALL soon became "SAM" to all who knew him. Those who served with him can bear witness to his high qualities of mind and heart and to his charming personality, which drew around him at all times a band of faithful and admiring friends and which endeared him to all his associates. Possessed of great mental vigor and physical strength, he used to the best advantage in his service in the State assembly and in the House of Representatives his intellectual powers in the highest interests of the State and of the Nation.

We can not lose sight of such a man, the work he performed, or the influence he exerted upon the interests and activities of his Commonwealth. He had a wide knowledge of the affairs of state. He was interested in its financial, commercial, and educational welfare, was always active in promoting all measures which had for their object the uplift of the people, and throughout his legislative career was a faithful public servant.

He was an energetic worker, noted for his kindliness and even temper. It was a great pleasure to be permitted to associate with him, and I regret that I shall no longer enjoy his wise counsel, his able assistance, or his encouragement at the committee table. I miss him; every member of the committee misses him; and his vacant chair is a sad reminder of our friend who has made the last pilgrimage to the Great Beyond.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we mourn the loss of our colleague, Hon. SAMUEL A. KENDALL, a man who was much interested in the welfare of his country, his State, and his constituents; who was untiring in his efforts, with full devotion to duty; and who always used his best judgment to mark his course in the various subjects which confronted him from day to day.

SAM KENDALL was a friendly man, enjoying the sociability of his colleagues. I voice the sentiment of all those who knew him best when I say we will miss him from our midst.

As president of the Pennsylvania Society he was interested greatly in its welfare. He was desirous of making the meetings instructive and entertaining, and his first thought was to accomplish something worth while for the assistance of our great State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KENDALL was a sincere friend, a devoted patriot, a faithful public servant in and out of the Congress, wide sympathies for the struggling masses at home and abroad, he will not soon be forgotten, and somewhere and somehow the influence exerted by him will continue for the good of his friends and for the promotion of the best interests of the people. Busy as he was performing his congressional duties and looking after his business interests when he could, he never forgot those whom he knew well and associated with before success and prominence came to him.

He has gone to that better land where sorrows and cares are unknown to meet those who have gone before him. Our lives will all be better and greatly enriched because we were privileged to know him and to have associated with him.

Not a charm that we know ere the boundary was crossed,
And we stood in the Valley alone;
Not a trait that we praised in our dear one is lost—
They have fairer and lovelier grown.
As the lilies burst forth when the shadows of night
Into bondage at daybreak are led,
So they bask in the glow by the pillar of light
In the land of the beautiful dead.

—Longfellow.

Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to the life, work, and character of our late colleague, the Hon. SAMUEL AUSTIN KENDALL.

When Mr. KENDALL came to the Sixty-sixth Congress, I met him for the first time. We soon became close friends, and this friendship continued to the day of his death. Three days before he died, Mr. KENDALL visited my office and we had quite a long talk. He was in good spirits, and when I expressed my regret that he would not be in the Seventy-third Congress, and that I should miss him, he said he expected to reside in Washington practically all the time and we would continue to meet frequently. He was always cheerful and optimistic; always had a pleasant greeting and a smile for every friend he met.

He was one of those rare individuals with whom friendship and affection were not matters of slow growth, and from our first meeting I felt toward him as though he had been a lifelong friend. He was generous and courteous to those with whom he came in contact, and I think it can be truly said of him that no man ever came to injury through a transaction he had with SAMUEL A. KENDALL.

He was one of those endowed by nature with a warm sympathy for and a broad understanding of humanity, despite its frailties and imperfections. I never heard him say a harsh word to a human being, and nature seemed to have endowed him with a knowledge of the great truth, one of the greatest of all truths, that "to understand all is to forgive all."

Taking him all in all, I never met a man in the course of my long association here with men from every section of our great land who did more to make me feel that there was something about our people, our institutions, our Government, our national spirit that was calculated to make this Nation lasting and secure.

Mr. KENDALL possessed an unusually clear mind, and when discussing legislative or business matters he showed a ready grasp and understanding of detail. He was greatly interested in his committee work, and believed it to be the duty of a Member of Congress to familiarize himself with all pending legislation, but particularly to specialize in subjects over which his committee had jurisdiction. His death was a real loss to the country, to his State, and to the district which he so ably represented.

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from the section of the State from which Mr. SAMUEL A. KENDALL was a Representative in Congress, I feel it is my duty, because of my great admiration of this man, to place in the RECORD a few words concerning his life.

It was my privilege to attend the funeral of Mr. KENDALL at Meyersdale, Pa. It was a cold, wet, dreary day, but in spite of all this the church in which the services were held was crowded to capacity by friends and neighbors who came to pay their last respects to a leading fellow townsman.

After all, it is our friends and neighbors who measure us most accurately—those with whom we live and deal.

Mr. KENDALL was loved and respected for his untiring efforts in behalf of the common people. His passing will be mourned by all of us.

As a citizen his time and talents were ever used in the upbuilding of his section and State and the uplift and betterment of society.

Mr. Speaker, a nobler man never lived. Hospitable, gentle, and lovable, a gentleman of honor, in manners and in innate refinement he was everything that a man could be to be respected and loved. He revered the teachings and traditions of our fathers. He measured his actions by the organic law of this land, and the plain people of the Nation lost a consistent and ardent champion when he died. In his family relations he was a most devoted husband and loving father, whose constant delight was to do some act that would bring pleasure to his wife or his children. His death was a distinct loss not only to his State but to the Nation, and while to-day we are bowed in sadness, we can console ourselves with the thought that by his illustrious career and his incomparable honesty, he has left a heritage more enduring and more to be treasured than all the riches of the world.

It is not gold, but only men
Can make a people great and strong,
Men who for truth and honor's sake
Stand fast and suffer long.
Brave men who work while others sleep,
Who dare while others fly,
These build a nation's pillars deep
And lift them to the sky.

Mr. DOUTRICH. Mr. Speaker, I should feel remiss in my obligations were I not to say a few words about my departed colleague, SAMUEL A. KENDALL.

He came to Congress eight years before I entered it. But when I came here, I had the good fortune to be placed upon the same committee on which he so efficiently served, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. During our mutual service on this committee I found that he was always desirous of aiding and passing good legislation, and was particularly interested in the welfare of the postal workers.

Mr. KENDALL'S geniality and kindness endeared him to all of us. His splendid abilities were seasoned by a kindly humor which lent sunshine and warmth to all his words and deeds. His service for others was outstanding, and we who have survived his departure will do well to keep vivid in our minds and hearts the story of his unselfish service.

His physical vision has departed, his face may melt away from view and mind, but his service here will live after him. Let it be said to his credit that no person ever heard him refer to his home people in other than the most affectionate terms. His love for his people and for his State approached a passion. If this trait was equaled by any other, it was his zeal and candor, supported by his persistent determination, to promote the welfare of his State and Nation by protecting, as he believed, every inherent right that belonged to the individual in the face of great opposition sometimes directed at him by those whose schemes he interfered with.

Mr. Speaker, it will always be a matter of pleasure to me that I had the opportunity to become acquainted with such a man, one whose passion was the love of his fellow men, whose eloquence was the inspiration of justice, whose hope was human freedom, and whose logic fixed its steady gaze upon the star of truth; one who did right with compelling insistence and who was not afraid that he might do wrong—a malady none too seldom found among those who are not sure of their approaches, who distrust themselves and stand with reluctant feet, holding action in subjection, on the very threshold of duty; one who, amid all the trials and tribulations, the vexations and vanities of a long life, "had kept the whiteness of his soul."

GODFREY G. GOODWIN

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, when I entered the House of Representatives four years ago and met my colleagues from Minnesota, I was a stranger in the group. As time passed, I learned to know and appreciate them, and there were none in the distinguished list of Congressmen from Minnesota for whom I held a higher regard than I did for GODFREY G. GOODWIN. His recent death has taken from me a personal friend, and the people of the State of Minnesota have lost a legislator of ability and high standing. He was experienced and of sound judgment. I was always glad to consult Godfrey on many questions coming before Congress.

He served his county as prosecuting attorney for many years before entering Congress. As a lawyer, and as a citizen, he stood for the best interests of his community and his country. He traveled Life's highway without hypocrisy or cant. His duties he took seriously, and his obligations he discharged faithfully.

The finest words that can be spoken of him tell of devotion to his family. They were always uppermost in his thoughts, and he gave them a full measure of service.

Our friend has gone to that "undiscovered land from whose bourne no traveler returns." But some place, somewhere, in the hereafter, he lives and moves and has his being. Death is not the end and the grave is not the goal.

Death, be not proud, though some have called thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so:
For those whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow
Die not, poor Death; nor yet canst thou kill me.
From rest and sleep, which but thy picture be,
Much pleasure; then from thee much more must flow;
And soonest our best men with thee do go—
Rest of their bones, and souls' delivery!
Thou art slave to fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,
And dost with poison, war, and sickness dwell;
And poppy or charms can make us sleep as well,
And better than thy stroke. Why swell'st thou then?
One short sleep past, we wake eternally,
And Death shall be no more; Death, thou shalt die.

We bid our colleague farewell, but not forever. On the pages of memory, his good deeds are written. We knew him, and we think of him as a kindly and sincere man, who went about us, doing good. I close with this tribute:

And thou art gone, most loved, most honored friend!
No, never more thy gentle voice shall blend
With air of earth its pure ideal tones,
Binding in one, as with harmonious zones,
The heart and intellect. And I no more
Shall with thee gaze on that unfathomed deep,
The human soul—as when, pushed off the shore,
Thy mystic bark would through the darkness sweep,
Itself the while so bright! For oft we seemed
As on some starless sea—all dark above,
All dark below—yet, onward as we drove,
To plough up light that ever round us streamed.
But he who mourns is not as one bereft
Of all he loved: thy living truths are left.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from a sad and melancholy task—that of accompanying the earthly remains of our late friend and colleague, Congressman GODFREY G. GOODWIN, back to his old home in Minnesota. As I stood beside the grave where the last loving service was held over all that was mortal of our beloved friend, I reflected upon our close friendship of many years.

No one in this House thought more of him. No one liked him better; no one had a greater admiration for his abilities; and no one in Congress or out of Congress had a higher appreciation than I of his good qualities of head and heart. To-day I come to place on record my tribute of affection to his memory. I knew him well as a Member of this House, and in a social way we were intimately acquainted. He was a man of noble character, sincere in purpose, of high ideals, with a genial, sunshiny disposition, and an attractive personality. He was a true friend in the best sense of the word, and those friends he had he held with ties of affection stronger than ropes of steel.

The untimely death of Congressman GOODWIN was a great shock to the Members of Congress and to his many friends in Minnesota. We will miss him more and more as the years come and go. He occupied a place in our affections which can not be filled, and we shall not soon look upon his like again. We sit in silent sadness with those who loved him; we grieve with those who were near and dear to him; and to all his relatives we extend our sincere and heartfelt sympathy. His early demise was a national loss, and those here who knew him best fully realize this, and hence feel most keenly his ultimely death.

He was the soul of honor; he loved the truth; his word was his bond; he spared no effort to serve a friend; he never forgot; he was no ingrate; he was an industrious Representative, a worker for the people, a doer of good in the vineyard of humanity, an energetic, public-spirited citizen, who did things for the advancement of mankind; he was broad-minded and liberal in his views, charitable to a fault, a gentleman of the old school; he was a Republican through and through, who firmly believed in the fundamental principles of our great party.

Such a man was Congressman GOODWIN, and such a man is not often born nor soon forgotten. He has departed for that undiscovered country, whither all must shortly journey, never to return, but he will live in his works for his fellow man and in the affectionate memory of those who knew and loved him. A grateful country will not soon forget his patriotic and self-sacrificing services; and his myriad of friends throughout the North Star State, which we so dearly love and cherish, ever remembering his kind words, his good counsel, and his noble deeds, will always keep his memory green.

Green be the turf above thee,
Friend of my better days;
None knew thee but to love thee,
Nor named thee but to praise.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, GODFREY GOODWIN was a man of unusually fine character, a useful public servant, a sincere friend, and a devoted father. He was modest, never disposed to force himself or his opinions on others and yet steadfast in adhering to principles in which he believed. He was long a public servant, as prosecuting attorney and Member of Congress, and during all that time he had the admiration and respect of all who knew him, or came in contact with him in the discharge of his public duties. Perhaps Mr. GOODWIN's outstanding quality was kindliness. During all the years I have known him, I never knew him to say an unkind word about anyone. He was a lovable character, and in his passing I have lost a loyal friend, and shall greatly miss his council and companionship.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, one of the most popular maxims in all the books is the injunction to "Speak nothing but good concerning the dead." In case of our deceased friend, Hon. GODFREY G. GOODWIN, it is not difficult to comply with that rule.

It is true there is sometimes a tendency to indulge in extravagant laudation of the departed. It is fortunate that when death closes the lips and eyes and stills the heart and arm of a man all criticism, hatred, and revenge are disarmed, and humanity is willing to remember no demerits, but cherish and even magnify the good only. That tendency may be due to the conscious weakness common to our natures. Realizing our own frailty and knowing that sooner or later our own hearts must cease to pulsate and our own lips grow dumb, anticipating something of our own lot with involuntary dread for the untried terrors of death's lone passage, we instinctively feel for the dead the same consideration which we hope for our own memories from the attention of our survivors. In the case, however, of our lamented comrade it was not necessary to wait for death to disarm malice nor stifle criticism. There was in his life and character enough good for a long speech without hunting for faults. Every person who knew him in life loved him. He was intuitively considerate of his fellow man, because he loved his fellow man. It was delightful to acknowledge his merits while he lived, without awaiting his death to shower his bier with an avalanche or flowers or pronounce to other ears praises for virtues, admiration of which we had gladly accorded him in life.

For almost seven years I sat with him in the great Committee on Banking and Currency and worked with him in the House of Representatives.

During the seven years of my association with him I have no recollection of a duty he failed to perform nor an unkind word or act to any fellow Member, nor of any failure to help, oblige, and please at every opportunity.

If "by their fruits ye shall know them," these reflections convince me that he was a good man, for "a good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." He loved his country and he loved his home State and city, to the beauty, advancement, and prosperity of which he contributed so much.

But he loved our great Republic, and if he appeared to love his own city and State more than other parts of our common country, it was more apparent than real and due to his active devotion to the true principle of our Government—that its success depends on individuals and communities locally doing their duty at home.

If every individual and every community should conform to that rule of action, all individuals and all communities would be good. The whole country would be good, and the Republic, justifying the theory and expectations of its founders, would live forever in usefulness and glory.

Of his domestic life I will leave others to speak, contenting myself with the satisfaction that, being a true and noble husband, he was also a wise, tender, and provident father, loved and honored in his home by a good wife and by lovely children, who proudly realize in their bereavement that "a good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children." They knew and rejoiced during his life that "the just man walketh in his integrity" and in his good name among men, and in their fond recollection of his benign life and example, shedding benefactions and glowing with benediction, they feel that "his children are blessed after him." I will not say that "his like we shall not soon see again," but rather express with joy the opinion that there are many of his kind.

His tragic death was a shock to all his associates, and his memory will be cherished by them as that of a gentleman in the most refined sense of that word, endeared by his gentleness to all his companions in labor.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I can add but little to the tribute that has been paid by my fellow Members to the memory of my departed friend and colleague, GODFREY G. GOODWIN.

It would be impossible to present in more than briefest outline the principles which guided and controlled the conduct of our late comrade in both his public and private life. Mr. Speaker, the excellencies of mind and heart which characterized him in his more intimate personal relations were truly reflected in his larger relation to the body politic as a public man and servant of the people. Loyalty, not only to friend and fellow man, but to ideal and conviction, was the great directing force of his energies in whatever sphere of action they were employed. Too often we hear the complaint that the man of lofty ideals, however competent he may be to resist evil in the restricted sphere of his private dealings and relations, is unable to cope with the far more complex and potential forces which beset the man in public life and too often tempt him to sacrifice honest conviction to political expediency. On every hand we hear that good men are prone to be weak in the open advocacy of that which they truly believe to be right, and that the bold and courageous efforts of men are most frequently directed to the service of quite selfish ends. Mr. Speaker, as a complete refutation of the cynical notion, so often expressed nowadays, that the man in public life must run counter to his own truest thought and conviction, let me point to the life of our departed friend, replete as it was with good deeds performed for the public weal under conditions requiring the exercise of moral courage of the very highest order. Here was a man who never compromised the truth as he saw and believed it, and never did he enlist his splendid talents in a cause that did not command his truest thought and sympathies.

From early manhood his naturally combative mind had been trained in that severest of all forensic schools, the court room, and when he reached this Hall, he was an intellectual foeman worthy the most seasoned debater's steel. To him political virtue consisted in something more than mere subscription to the tenets of his party's faith; to him it meant action—ceaseless and dynamic action—to bring to his fellow men the actual and present realization of the blessings of good government; to him it meant the putting on of the full armor of righteousness and the uncompromising warfare on the cohorts of special favor and privilege. Public office and station represented something more to him than the mere realization of personal ambition; it represented to him opportunity to serve his fellow men, and I need not say how well that opportunity was improved.

Mr. GOODWIN was truly a man free from envy, hatred, or malice. In both private life and public station he followed the injunction of the great apostle that—

> Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

So did he travel through life's common way in cheerful godliness.

Cut off in the prime of life, our friend has been called from this Hall, but we are comforted by the thought that in the everlasting halls above his freed spirit awaits the final convocation of the just.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, on this occasion, words are inadequate to eulogize one of my departed colleagues, the Hon. GODFREY G. GOODWIN. No voice can give expression to the sorrow of the human heart on such an occasion. All men feel a pain which words can not paint when death has taken from them their loved ones or their friends. On such an occasion, silence is eloquence.

In this busy world men struggle, and it has ever been so from life's dawn to age's twilight. We gather wisdom, accumulate worldly goods, titles, and distinctions, and then death takes away all.

Struggles of life cease with the tomb, and for the friends of the deceased the memory of their noble aspirations and the consummation thereof remains to comfort.

Our colleague GODFREY G. GOODWIN is to be judged and praised by that high standard. His life was just and right. The story of his career tells of devotion to the general good. He was charitable and gentle, and no other man in Minnesota engaged in life's stern battles has struck so few blows that have given needless pain or has left behind as many memories of kind deeds. He fought generously. Even his antagonists were not made to suffer needlessly.

He was a rare character, brave and firm in all his dealings, but he did not leave behind scars because the quality of his gentleness was always in evidence. In his march forward to his goal his feet did not crush the weak or bring needless sorrow to others. He was a good citizen, devoted to his home and to his State. His patriotism was lofty, and he was true to American ideals.

His death was a shock to us, and the public has suffered an irremedial loss, but his memory is sweet with the fragrance of nobility, kindliness, and sympathy.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to have served two terms in the House of Representatives with my friend and colleague, Hon. GODFREY G. GOODWIN. Long before I became personally acquainted with him I knew of the high regard in which he was held by the people of the community in which he spent most of his life. It had not been my pleasure to know him prior to my service in Congress, but I had known of him through his many friends.

In the practice of his profession he was held in high esteem and warm remembrance by all. A few days before his untimely death he told me of his desire to return to the community where he spent so many years of his life and resume the practice of his profession. He was always spoken of in the highest terms for his ability and integrity as a lawyer. He was blessed with the good fortune to at once gain the respect and love of all with whom he came in contact. He was genial, kind, and full of warmth for everyone. He was always easy of approach and held himself at all times on a par with the humblest of his constituents. He always seemed to me to be one of the very best-tempered men I have ever known. No difference and no opposition ever seemed to change his pleasant ways toward those who did not agree with him. His ability no one questioned and everyone recognized that he was one of the most agreeable companions and one of the pleasantest of friends. It was always happiness to meet him as he had one of the most attractive qualities, personal charm. His disposition was singularly attractive. He did not lose his temper even under great provocation. He could not be an enemy because he could not carry malice long enough to provoke resentment. He won his way to the front by a genial disposition, an excellent temper, and with determination and thorough acquaintance with the subjects that engaged his energies.

As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House he struggled with some of the most complex problems that have ever engaged the attention of the Congress of the United States. Death left unfinished his contribution to pending solutions. The Nation has lost a sincere and able public servant. His family has lost a devoted father. As we mourn his loss, we pay tribute to all that he did and all that he desired.

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker, we meet to-day according to custom to pay tribute to the memory of those of our colleagues who have passed to the great beyond since the last session of Congress. The death of our beloved colleague from Minnesota, the Hon. GODFREY G. GOODWIN, came as a shock to us all. After returning from a brief trip he had been in our midst and suddenly, without warning, he was stricken in the very shadow of the Capitol where for eight years he has given unstinted service to his State and country.

I saw him but a day or two before his sudden passing away. He was not feeling well, but he was cheerful and smiling in his usual happy manner.

It was my pleasure to meet GODFREY GOODWIN for the first time in 1926, following my nomination for Congress, when all the candidates met to discuss the campaign of that year. We became well acquainted from that meeting and that acquaintance ripened into a warm and sincere friendship which I shall ever cherish as one of the happy memories of my service in the National Congress.

Mr. GOODWIN was a man of lovable disposition and fine character. Never did I hear him utter a word of unjust reproach or criticism directed against any fellow man. Quiet, reserved in manner, and unobtrusive, his life was like that of a deep river that flowed strongly and unceasingly on without the noise and disorder of a shallower stream.

Minnesota has lost a faithful and valued servant in the passing of Congressman GOODWIN. Our Nation has lost a valued counselor, a man of integrity and character, in his sudden demise.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to dwell at length and in detail upon the life and public services of our distinguished colleague, GODFREY G. GOODWIN. That will be done better and more eloquently than I could do it. I wish, rather, only to pay to his memory the sincere and modest tribute of a friend and comrade. It is a significant and a pleasing thing that we should gather here in these historic Halls for this purpose, where so many crises in the Nation's history have been met and where the great moments of our colleague were spent.

Mr. Speaker, I am told that in a far country, in the midst of a splendid wilderness, where towering, snow-capped peaks stand like sentinels and the roar of a cataract translates itself into a murmur of music, there has been erected a beautiful temple of white marble. I am told that this temple is surmounted by a great crystal dome, beneath which is a shrine, and that those who pray at this shrine can hear their prayers answered in a language of ineffable sweetness. I wonder if the voices of those who speak in this Hall may not come back to us.

Mr. Speaker, if it is given in that other world to remember what took place in this, I know that in the deepest sanctuary of Mr. GOODWIN's heart is cherished the memory of the hours he spent with his wife and family, and next to them his friendships, and after these, I am sure, his soul responds to the tense excitement of this place in times of national stress and crisis. He had courage—moral courage, political courage—that virtue which is both rare and valuable, and because he had courage he loved politics, with its strife, its battles, its defeats, and its victories.

He thought straight, and he voted as he thought. He loved those with whom he had been associated before he came to Congress. He never lost his interest in their welfare. He was never too busy to concern himself with their troubles. He had a broad sympathy with those in distress and found a pleasure and satisfaction in aiding them. He understood the common people, perhaps because he never ceased being one of them. He held some of the highest offices that they could give him and administered them with distinction. He labored earnestly and zealously for the interest of the people of his district, and represented them with ability. He had the charm of personality that begets enduring friendship and stimulates personal loyalty.

I liked to talk with him, and I spent many hours in his office, for he had a sound philosophy that inspired confidence and radiated good will. I came to respect his judgment and to admire his stanch integrity of mind and heart. He had faults, as who has not, but they only served to emphasize his many good qualities. When I think of him I like to remember that it is a great thing to be a statesman but a greater to be a man.

Left to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and a loving father are his wife, his son Alden, and three daughters, Marjorie, Lois, and Eleanore. To them must come that infinite consolation in their hours of loneliness and in their days of sadness that in this little family circle was wrapped everything that Godfrey held sweet and dear to him in this vale of tears; it was to this home, so richly endowed with the comforts and the happiness and the contentment that make life's battles seem so commonplace, to which he would always turn for relief after fulfilling his arduous duties in the workaday world—to that heaven on earth, the home, which is the sanctuary of that true Americanism which he so nobly represented in his principles and his ideals.

AFTER RECESS

At the conclusion of the recess the Speaker called the House to order, and then, pursuant to House Resolution 362, as a further mark of respect to the memories of the deceased, declared the House adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

SENATE

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1933

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most Gracious God, who hast loved us into being, who hast put into our hearts such deep desire that we can not be at peace apart from Thee, hearken to the sighing of our souls' great need, for Thou art our Father, Thou knowest whereof we are made, Thou rememberest that we art but dust. Grant to us therefore that we may not go unsatisfied because of any unrighteousness of heart, and strengthen every purpose that Thy will may be our constant choice and satisfaction. Grant to the people of the United States, and especially to the Members of the Senate, that every danger may arouse in us a challenge to the quiet performance of our duty till every wrong is righted, and the people of this Nation, no longer wavering or looking back, shall march breast forward as a mighty host in the way of Thy laws, finding therein a safe and peaceful passage to the arms of Thy great love and the blessed fellowship of the saints in life; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Drew, judge of city court, Connell Fort, mayor, J. R. Murp, secretary, J. M. Peace, police juror, ward five, Walton Fort, police juror, ward four, and sundry other citizens, of Minden; F. F. Mann and sundry other citizens of Monroe; and John C. Ransom and sundry citizens of West Monroe, all in the State of Louisiana, praying for a continuance of the investigation of the Louisiana senatorial election of 1932, and the necessary allotment of money therefor, by the special committee of the Senate to investigate campaign expenditures of the various presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1932, which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the United States Conference of Mayors, at Washington, D. C., on the 17th instant, favoring the passage of remedial legislation for municipalities so as to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and create employment by providing for and expediting a public-works program, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented to-day by Mr. LA FOLLETTE.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by members of Fianna Fail (Inc.) (Irish Republican Party of America), New York City, N. Y., protesting against any reduction being made in the debts owed to America by foreign countries and that the Government insist on due payment as already arranged, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the mayor and Council of the City of Wilmington, Del., the Common Council of Michigan City, Ind., and the Council of the City of Toledo, Ohio, favoring the passage of legislation authorizing the issuance of a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen and appointment as brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army, of Thaddeus Kosciusko on October 13, 1783, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate an affidavit from Eudarda K. Baltuff (Harris), of Savannah, Ga., relative to the so-called Coulter case, being an incident of the alleged Northwest conspiracy and Zev case, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BROOKHART presented a petition of sundry citizens of Clayton County, Iowa, praying for the passage of legislation known as the Frazier relief bill for the refinancing of farm mortgages, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KING presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Blanding, Utah, remonstrating against the control of grazing on the public domain in San Juan County, Utah, by an association of the large sheep and cattle men organized as the San Juan Grazing Association, and also against the passage of legislation allowing such grazing control under private rule and regulation, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by the United Presbyterian Church, of Jetmore; the Home Builders Class of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School of Liberal; and local chapters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hutchinson (Arborhurst Park), Kansas City, Nashville, Plainville, Plevna, Sterling, Walnut, and Whitewater, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of legislation to regulate and supervise the motion-picture industry, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a communication in the nature of a memorial from the Washington (D. C.) Board of Trade, signed by Ben T. Webster, its president, and Joshua Evans, jr., chairman, municipal finance committee, protesting against the accumulation of a surplus of money of the District of Columbia in the United States Treasury and especially a proposed increase in taxes as indicated in pending measures, and favoring, if it is the determination of Congress to limit the District budget to its present size, the reduction of tax rates accordingly, under the present economic situation, instead of increased taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Towson Post, No. 22, American Legion, of Towson, Md., protesting against the passage of legislation reducing the present pay and allowances of officers or enlisted personnel on the active or retired list of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Canajoharie local of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), of Montgomery County, N. Y., favoring changes in the monetary system so as to cause commodity prices to be restored to the average price levels of 1921–1929, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Moravia (N. Y.) Branch of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.) favoring such change in the monetary system as will equalize price levels of commodities, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Grace Congregation, United Brethren in Christ, of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the imposition of any new taxes and favoring reduction in governmental expenditures, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Pierstown Grange, No. 793, Patrons of Husbandry, of the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for agricultural relief through the so-called allotment plan, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Canajoharie local of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), favoring the making of substantial reductions in freight rates on milk shipments, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Hornell Lodge, No. 836, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Hornell, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to protect railroads against competition by trucks or other vehicles operating upon the highways, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring Federal regulation and supervision of the motion-picture industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Albany County Woman's Christian Temperance Union (Inc.), of the State of New York, favoring world peace and an embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions of war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a resolution adopted at New York City by the New York State Bar Association favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Local No. 44, United Upholsterers' Union of New York, of New York City; Dolan Lodge, No. 201, International Association of Machinists, of Hornell; and Fulton County Typographical Union, No. 268, of Gloversville, all in the State of New York, favoring the passage of Senate bill 5125, to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Buffalo Section of the New York State Association of Highway Engineers, of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the obligation of further Federal-aid highway appropriations for repayment of Reconstruction Finance Corporation unemployment relief loans, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Bronx County Bar Association, of the State of New York, favoring the consideration, in connection with amendment of the national bankruptcy act, of the designation by the judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York of a standing receiver in bankruptcy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Republican Club of Queens Village, N. Y., favoring repeal of the provisions of the so-called economy act relating to furlough, automatic promotions, and reduction in night-work differential pay of Government employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Brooklyn Council-Kings County, Department of New York, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Brooklyn, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of proposed legislation incorporated in the War Department appropriation bill discriminating against officers on the active and retired lists of the Army who rose from the ranks, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of Charles J. White, of Utica, N. Y., remonstrating against proposed legislation restricting the pay of active and retired officers of the National Guard in which any service has been counted other than active commissioned service in the military or naval forces of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Lavere-Harrington Post, No. 2320, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Oswego, and the National Society Daughters of the Union, 1861–1865 (Inc.), in the State of New York, remonstrating against inclusion of the so-called Connery and Taber amendments, affecting pay and compensation for services in the Army and Navy, in the War Department appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Society Daughters of the Union, 1861–1865 (Inc.), indorsing the amendment to the War Department appropriation bill increasing the appropriations for training, ammunition, and subsistence allowances for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of several organizations and sundry citizens, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution or modification of the national prohibition act, which were ordered to lie on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. NEELY presented the following resolution, adopted by the House of Delegates of the State of West Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolution (by Mr. Lubliner)

Whereas the committtee on elections and privileges of the house of delegates for the 1933 session has had under consideration the contest cases of the election relating to the unseating of the four Republican delegates of McDowell County, W. Va.; and

Whereas after due and deliberate consideration of all the evidence in record form as well as affidavits and statements of witnesses made before it, your committee is of the opinion that gross and flagrant violations of the State and Federal election laws have been committed; and

Whereas it is the sense of said committee that a thorough and painstaking investigation of the election held in McDowell County, W. Va., on November 8, 1932, be made: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of delegates, That the judge of the Circuit Court of McDowell County, the judge of the criminal court of said county, the prosecuting attorney of McDowell County, the judge of the Federal Court for the Southern District of West Virginia, the two Members from this State in the Senate of the United States, and the six Members from this State in the House of Representatives, and the newly elected Members of the last-named body, and the Attorney General of the United States be forwarded a certified copy of this resolution, and each of them be requested to investigate thoroughly and completely the election held in said McDowell County on November 8, 1932, and that in the event any person or persons have been guilty of any violations of the election law, State or Federal, they be vigorously prosecuted to the full extent of the law; and be it further

Resolved, That a transcript of the evidence in these cases be furnished to the Attorney General of the United States, the United States district attorney for the southern district of West Virginia, and the prosecuting attorney of McDowell County.

I, John S. Hall, clerk of the House of Delegates of West Virginia, hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was regularly adopted by the house of delegates on February 8, 1933.

JNO. S. HALL,
Clerk House of Delegates.

FEDERAL AID FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I submit resolutions adopted by the Conference of Mayors, held in Washington February 17, in the nature of a petition. I ask that the resolutions may be printed as a part of my remarks in the RECORD at this point and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by United States Conference of Mayors, Washington, D. C., February 17, 1933

Whereas municipal governments enjoy a more intimate contact with the people than other agencies, we, as chief executives of American municipalities through our personal knowledge of conditions, fearful of the disastrous effects which would result from municipal repudiation of obligations with resultant bankruptcy, believing that the collapse of municipal credit would mean the destruction of private enterprise and banking credit and seriously impair national stability, urge the immediate adoption of remedial legislation.

In 1932 a committee representing the chief executives of the major municipalities of the United States submitted to Congress recommendations for the protection of the American people from starvation. Certain measures of legislation as recommended by this committee in 1932 were approved by the Congress of the United States and the President. A measure providing an appropriation of $300,000,000 for aid to municipalities for the conservation of the lives of the people was adopted.

Two additional measures presented by the committee failed to receive favorable action by Congress. One measure provided for an appropriation in the sum of $500,000,000 to be made available for the municipalities of the United States to meet maturing bond obligations that the municipalities were not in a position to finance or found impossible to finance. The additional measure that did not receive the approval of Congress provided for an expenditure in the sum of $5,000,000,000 for a construction program to relieve unemployment in America. The failure of Congress to adopt the $5,000,000,000 program is unquestionably responsible for the tragic condition that to-day obtains in the United States.

In June of 1932 when this recommendation was made it was estimated that there were 10,000,000 men without employment in the United States. To-day it is conservatively estimated that the number is approximately 14,000,000 men. Welfare and relief aid and charitable drives have been found necessary to prevent actual starvation in many sections of our country and the prospects for relief of the people through employment is apparently more remote to-day than it was in June, 1932.

We accordingly recommend for the earnest consideration of Congress the adoption of a major construction program through which opportunity will be afforded the citizenship of America to preserve their self-reliance, self-respect, and earn the money necessary for the maintenance in decency of their families.

We consider the depression now in the fourth year as the greatest economic catastrophe ever known in the history of our Nation, since it is now national in scope and beyond the power of any other agency to correct, and we consider it the duty of Congress to so regard it and we urge the early adoption of such measures as in their judgment may be necessary to restore order and opportunity to work for the people of the United States.

FINANCIAL AID

Resolved, That in view of the foregoing recitals and in order that immediate relief may be afforded municipalities by the adoption of an act as hereinafter set forth or in substantial conformity therewith. To wit:

"An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting of a public-work program.'

"Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled 'An act to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting of a public-work program,' be amended by adding a new subdivision (k) to section 201 of said act, to read as follows:

"'Section 201. (k) (1) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any municipality or political subdivision of any State or Territory whenever, in the judgment of the board of directors of said corporation, such loan would relieve the financial condition of such municipality or any of its municipally owned public utilities and would in the opinion of said corporation be a sound investment. Such loans may be represented by notes, bonds, or such other evidences of indebtedness or contracts to repay as may be appropriate. Loans may be made at par, notwithstanding other obligations of such municipality are below par. The corporation is also authorized and empowered to purchase tax-anticipation warrants of any such municipality with or without maturity date.

"'In making such loans the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may take into consideration whether such municipality has been efficiently conducted; what economies have been made effective since January 1, 1931; and may suggest as a condition precedent to any loans such other economies or efficiencies as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall deem necessary.

"'Any loans may be secured by a pledge of any unpaid and/or delinquent taxes.

"'(2) This section shall be liberally construed by said Reconstruction Finance Corporation so as to extend actual help and stability to all municipalities whenever sound judgment permits such loans and/or tax-anticipation warrants purchases to be made and there is reasonable probability of the repayment of same. Interest on such loans and/or tax-anticipation warrants shall in no event be more than 6 per cent per annum, and all obligations evidencing said loans and/or tax-anticipation warrants shall be purchased at not less than par.

"'The Reconstruction Finance Corporation may offer bids for any bonds or obligations and/or tax-anticipation warrants offered by any municipality and may purchase refunding bonds of any such municipalities.

"'(3) "Municipality" as herein used shall include any political subdivision of any State or Territory.'" Therefore be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be submitted forthwith to the Congress of the United States by the executive committee of this organization, and that said executive committee be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to urge its immediate adoption by the Congress of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That we recommend that the Federal Government assume a larger measure of financial responsibility in meeting the problems of unemployment relief of the Nation, and we do recommend that such additional Federal relief funds as may be necessary and as are appropriated by Congress be made on a direct-grant basis to the municipalities of the Nation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14392) to authorize the payment of taxes and assessments on family dwelling houses in the District of Columbia in quarterly installments, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1245) thereon.

Mr. WALCOTT, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13817) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1246) thereon.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 5612) to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1247) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 5456) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen," approved May 13, 1932, to desert-land entrymen, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1250) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11477) for the relief of George Charles Walthers, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1248) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART (for Mr. HOWELL) submitted the views of the minority of the Claims Committee on House bill 11477, just above noted, which was ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 1248.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3379) for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1249) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 5660) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain Government property in St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 5661) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co. a tract of land comprising part of the Plattsburg Barracks Military Reservation, N. Y. (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 5662) granting an increase of pension to Truman H. Wilkinson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 5663) amending an act approved February 20, 1929 (45 Stat. 1249), entitled "An act for the relief of the Nez Perce Tribe of Indians"; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 5664) to amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)"; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution and ask that it may be read and then that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 363), as follows:

Whereas extensive propaganda has been circulated urging recognition by the United States of the Russian Soviet Government; and

Whereas early in the history of the Russian Soviet Government the United States announced a policy of nonrecognition of such Government so long as conditions then existing and policies then adhered to continued; and

Whereas this policy of nonrecognition has been steadily adhered to by this Government; and

Whereas before the Government of the United States should take any steps looking to the recognition of the Russian Soviet Government or the adoption of a different policy than that heretofore adhered to, a full and complete investigation should be made of all matters bearing upon the question of recognition: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of economic, political, and other conditions existing in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, including the position of the Russian Soviet Government with respect to recognition by the United States of such Government, the attitude generally of the Russian Soviet Government toward the Government of the United States and other Governments, and any other facts bearing upon the question of recognition of the Russian Soviet Government. The committee shall report its findings to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-second and succeeding Congresses until the final report is submitted, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $_____, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, is the resolution to be taken up now?

Mr. KING. I asked when I offered it that it might be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JOHNSON. I beg pardon.

Mr. KING. I shall seek an opportunity, if time permits, to address myself to the resolution at some later date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COLLINS, Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. PARKS, Mr. BARBOUR, and Mr. CLAGUE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 567. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. certain tracts of land situate in the county of Harford and State of Maryland;

S. 1705. An act for the relief of Samuel C. Davis;

S. 4576. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to grant an easement for railroad right of way over and upon a portion of the helium gas bearing lands of the United States of America, in Potter County, in the State of Texas;

H. R. 7519. An act to amend the Penal Code of the Canal Zone; and

H. R. 7520. An act to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure for the Canal Zone.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On February 14, 1933:

S. 221. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Wilmot Castle Co.;

S. 3504. An act for the relief of Lyman L. Miller.

On February 16, 1933:

S. 222. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of B. F. Hart; and

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1933.

On February 17, 1933:

S. 188. An act for the relief of Tampico Marine Iron Works;

S. 220. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Van Camp Sea Food Co. (Inc.);

S. 2395. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to school district No. 15, Lincoln County, Mont.;

S. 4339. An act repealing certain provisions of the act of June 21, 1906, as amended, relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of Kickapoo and affiliated Indians of Oklahoma; and

S. 5289. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint George N. Nicholson in the police department of said District.

On February 18, 1933:

S. 4694. An act to amend section 812 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

PROPOSED LIMITATION OF DEBATE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 360) submitted by Mr. BARKLEY on the 15th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present Congress debate on the part of any Senator shall be limited to 1 hour on any measure, including conference reports and amendments between the Houses, and to 30 minutes on any amendment or motion relating thereto.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is only one measure which I have in mind which makes me hesitate to agree to the resolution. Will the Senator consent to let the resolution go over for a few minutes until I may consult another person about the particular matter I have in mind?

Mr. BARKLEY. If I do not lose my right, I will consent to that. The resolution, however, comes up automatically at this time, and I am afraid that if it goes over it may lose its status.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution may be passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. BORAH. And it may be taken up by unanimous consent, may it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to it going over for an hour or so, if we can have an understanding that it will then be brought up.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I can not agree to give consent that the consideration of the resolution shall extend beyond the hour of 1 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will not ask that it go over until 1 o'clock; I will not ask that it go over for more than an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that at 12.30 o'clock p. m., if that will be sufficient time for the purpose of the Senator from Idaho, the resolution shall then be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I can not consent to that in view of the probability of bankruptcy legislation and legislation affecting the reorganization of the railroads coming up for consideration. It seems to me that by agreeing to the resolution we would be hobbling ourselves without knowing what we might get into, and the consideration of the resolution might involve delay.

Mr. BARKLEY. The resolution automatically comes up now, and there is no prospect of any delay or time being consumed on it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate at 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will come before the Senate at 1 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. So that it will give the Senator from Kentucky a half hour for the consideration of his resolution, if the unanimous-consent arrangement asked shall be entered into. I doubt, however, whether the resolution could be disposed of in half an hour, although I should like to see the order entered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Kentucky, I desire to remind him that there was rather an agreement or understanding that the morning hour to-day should be given up to the consideration of the so-called cotton bill, in which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is interested. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will let the resolution go over until Monday, when we will again have a morning hour and his resolution will again come up automatically.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not object to its going over until Monday, if we are going to have a morning hour on that day——

Mr. McNARY. We are going to have a morning hour on Monday next.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if my resolution will come up automatically at that time.

Mr. McNARY. It will come up automatically at the conclusion of the routine business.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to inquire of the Chair as to that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the resolution shall be passed over without prejudice until Monday morning, it will be laid before the Senate at the conclusion of morning business on that day as a resolution coming over from a previous day.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution goes over, and morning business is closed.

CLAIMS OF CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES AND PANAMA—TREATY WITH PANAMA

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment? I have a matter which I think can be disposed of without debate.

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in 1926 the Governments of the United States and Panama entered into a convention providing for an arbitration of claims and giving a certain length of time in which American citizens might present their claims, and vice versa. It has been found, owing to some delays that have occurred, that the time in which these claims may be presented is entirely too brief. So Panama and the United States have entered into a convention extending the time to April 1, 1933. That is a very short period of time, but it is thought it will be sufficient; and I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the convention with Panama extending the time may be now considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may we not have other executive business considered at the same time?

Mr. KING. That is objected to.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Utah objects to what? To my suggestion or to the treaty?

Mr. KING. As I understood the Senator, he was asking that other executive business be considered, and to that I objected.

Mr. MOSES. Very well; if that is to be the attitude, to pick out one or two items of executive business, objection could be made very readily to those.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object in this instance, because this extension only goes to the 1st of April, and it is absolutely necessary, if American citizens are to have an opportunity to present their claims, that the treaty should be ratified.

Mr. MOSES. Might it not be still further extended if we did not ratify it by that time?

Mr. BORAH. We would have to enter into a new convention.

Mr. MOSES. That would not be a difficult matter.

Mr. BORAH. This convention has already been ratified by the Assembly of Panama and is the only way by which we can possibly have opportunity afforded to present claims between now and the 1st of April.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not believe that there is any substantial objection, may I say to the Senator from New Hampshire, to this arrangement.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; but my single objection would prevent action.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that perfectly, and so would the single objection of any other Senator, but I do not believe that the Senator from New Hampshire would act arbitrarily in the matter or that he would object unless he had reason for doing so.

Mr. MOSES. I have just said what the reason was—namely, that there are many items of executive business which, to my mind, are quite as important as this convention, because, in view of our relations with the Government of Panama, it does not seem to me that there would be undue delay in renewing this convention, if necessary; and if the Senator from Arkansas will give me some assurance that at a later date prior to the adjournment of the present Congress we shall have an opportunity to consider other matters of executive business, of course, I shall not stand in the way of this pressing matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I can give the Senator no assurance that there will be executive sessions of the Senate. The Senator well understands that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Idaho has the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Senator from Idaho to yield merely that I may appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire. It happens that some people whom I know very well, and I think possibly the Senator may know some of them, have claims against Panama that are dependent, in reality, for their presentation finally upon the ratification of this particular treaty. The time will expire on the 1st day of April, and the ratification of this convention will afford the only opportunity they will have between now and the 1st day of April to present their claims.

Mr. MOSES. I think the Senator is in error about that. To-day is the 18th of February.

Mr. JOHNSON. I realize that to-day is the 18th of February, and two weeks from to-day will be the inauguration.

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. That will be the end of the present Congress. We face realities here; there will be no executive sessions of this body. Now, inasmuch as that is the actual situation, why deprive American citizens who have claims against Panama of the right and the ability to present their claims? That is all that is sought by this treaty.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I am not actuated by any animosity or resentment or feeling with reference to those who have claims against Panama, but I do have a very deep feeling about all the other important matters of executive business in attempting to deal with which we are thwarted. It seems to me that the only way of showing that feeling is to take the attitude that I have been taking thus far with reference to the request for unanimous consent preferred by the Senator from Idaho. Of course, the pathetic appeal made by the Senator from California affects me strangely. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. That is perfectly obvious; I knew that the Senator from New Hampshire would be affected by this appeal in behalf of justice, because the ears of the Senator from New Hampshire are always attuned to the slightest whisper of justice.

Mr. MOSES. And of necessity.

Mr. JOHNSON. And of necessity. May I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire to take out upon those he deems responsible for the situation he suggests whatever he may wish to take out; but that in the case of this treaty, which is wholly fair and just and which is absolutely essential for the relief of American citizens, he let it be ratified.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from California knows my susceptibility so well, Mr. President, that I have to yield to his blandishments. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the treaty.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty Executive B, Seventy-second Congress, second session, convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, signed in Panama December 17, 1932, which was read, as follows:

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama desiring to modify certain provisions of a Convention for the settlement and amicable adjustment of claims presented by the citizens of each country against the other, signed at Washington July 28, 1926, have decided to conclude a Convention for that purpose and have nominated as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Mr. Roy Tasco Davis, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Panama; and who after having communicated to each other their respective full powers found to be in due and proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE 1

The second paragraph of Article VI of the Convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama for the settlement and amicable adjustment of claims by citizens of each country against the other, signed at Washington July 28, 1926, is amended to read as follows:

The Commission shall be bound to hear, examine and decide, before July 1, 1933, all the claims filed on or before October 1, 1932.

Article VIII of the Claims Convention signed at Washington on July 28, 1926, by plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama is amended to read as follows:

The total amount awarded in all the cases decided in favor of the citizens of one country shall be deducted from the total amount awarded to the citizens of the other country, and the balance shall be paid at the city of Panama or at Washington, in gold coin or its equivalent the first of July, 1936, or before, to the Government of the country in favor of whose citizens the greater amount may have been awarded.

ARTICLE 3

The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective Constitutions. Ratifications of this Convention shall be exchanged in Panama as soon as practicable and the Convention shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed and affixed their seals to this Convention.

Done in duplicate in Panama this seventeenth day of December, 1932.

[SEAL.] ROY T. DAVIS

J. D. AROSEMENA [SEAL.]

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive B, Seventy-second Congress, second session, a convention with Panama for the settlement and adjustment of claims, signed in Panama, December 17, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty? [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is adopted and the treaty is ratified.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD in connection with the treaty just ratified a statement by the Secretary of State.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 14, 1933.

The Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BORAH: On July 28, 1926, the Governments of the United States and Panama signed a claims convention providing for the arbitration of claims of American citizens against the Republic of Panama and claims of Panamanian citizens against the United States. Under the terms of this convention, which did not become effective until October 3, 1931, the commission provided for therein is required to hear, examine, and decide within the period expiring April 1, 1933, all claims presented to it. It having become apparent to both Governments that the commission would be unable to complete its labors within this period, the Governments signed a convention on December 17, 1932, extending until July 1, 1933, the period for the hearing, examination, and decision of claims by the commission. On January 19, 1933, the President transmitted this convention to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to its ratification. The Legislative Assembly of Panama has already given its advice and consent to the ratification of the convention, but unless the advice and consent of the Senate is previously given the functions of the commission will terminate on April 1, 1933, leaving unadjudicated the most important claims of the United States.

It is extremely important that action respecting this convention should be taken by the Senate during the present session. The time provided for the decision of these claims, under the pending convention, is very limited, and it appears that unless the commission is permitted to function uninterruptedly it will pass out of existence without completing its labors. Any interruption to the work of the commission between April 1, 1933, and the date upon which the Senate might act on the convention following the present session of the Congress would, therefore, result in the inability of the commission to complete its labors under these conventions, and the Panamanian Congress will not meet again in regular session until September, 1934.

Any steps which you may be able to take to expedite action with a view to obtaining during the present session the advice and consent of the Senate to this convention will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES GRAFTON ROGERS.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF COTTON BY THE GOVERNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative business.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5122.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5122) to provide for the purchase and sale of cotton under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby created in the Department of Agriculture a cotton board (hereinafter referred to as the board). Such board shall consist of six members, to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, all of which members shall be residents of the cotton-producing States and all of whom shall be qualified and experienced in either the purchasing, handling, or production of cotton. The members of the board shall receive no compensation for their services but shall be paid their actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties. They shall hold office during the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture, the Farm Board, and all other departments and agencies of the Government are hereby directed—

(a) To sell to the said Cotton Board at such price as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the board all cotton now owned by them.

(b) To take such action and to make such settlements as are necessary in order to acquire full legal title to all cotton on which money has been loaned or advanced, upon such terms as they may deem fair and just, and to sell this cotton also to the board in the same manner as is provided in the preceding paragraph hereof.

SEC. 3. The board is also hereby authorized to acquire by purchase at the market price the cotton previously given by the Government to the Red Cross Society for relief purposes and now being sold by that society.

SEC. 4. The board shall also be authorized to acquire by purchase at the market value thereof any other cotton owned by the producers thereof in all cases in which such producers will agree in writing to reduce their acreage planted in cotton in the manner hereinafter set out.

SEC. 5. The board shall have authority to borrow money upon all cotton in its possession or control and deposit as collateral for such loans the warehouse receipts for such cotton.

SEC. 6. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to advance money and to make loans to the board in such amounts and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the board and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with such warehouse receipts as collateral security.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts with the producers of cotton to sell to every such producer an amount of cotton in the hands of the board equivalent in amount to the amount of reduction in production of cotton by such producer below the amount produced by him in the preceding crop year, in all cases where such producer agrees in writing to reduce the amount of cotton produced by him in the previous year by not less than 30 per cent, without increase in fertilization per acre.

To every such producer so agreeing to reduce production the Secretary of Agriculture shall deliver an option contract agreeing to sell to said producer an amount of cotton equivalent to the amount of his estimated reduction of the cotton in the possession and control of the board.

The producer is to have the option to buy said cotton at its market value on the day of the execution of his agreement to reduce his production, and is to have the right at any time up to the 15th day of August, 1933, to exercise his option, upon proof that he has complied with his contract and with all the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect thereto, by taking said cotton upon payment by him of his option price and all actual carrying charges on such cotton; or the board may sell such cotton for the account of such producer, paying him the excess of the market price at the date of sale over the market price at the date of his contract after deducting all actual and necessary carrying charges: Provided, That in no event shall the producer be held responsible or liable for loss incurred in the holding of such cotton or on account of the currency charges therein.

SEC. 8. The board shall sell the cotton held by it at its discretion.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to make all necessary rules and regulations and to employ such officers and employees as are necessary to execute the provisions of this and the eight immediately preceding sections.

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COPELAND. Do I understand that the Senator from South Carolina is seeking to bring up this measure by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it has already been taken up by motion and is now before the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. At the proper time I wish to say something about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move to strike out section 2 and insert the matter which I send to the desk.

Mr. SMITH. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee offers the following amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Strike out section 2, being lines 1 to 12, both inclusive, and insert the following:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture, the Farm Board, and all other departments and agencies of the Government, are hereby directed:

(a) To take such action and to make such settlements as are necessary in order to acquire full legal title to all cotton on which money has been loaned or advanced by them upon such terms as they may deem fair and just: Provided, That no amount in excess of outstanding advances to individual producers and charges paid or accrued for storage, transportation, insurance, and interest against the cotton so acquired shall be allowed by the Farm Board in such settlement: Provided further, That if the amount of such advances and charges on the actual cotton so acquired can not be determined, no amount in excess of the market value of the cotton shall be allowed by the Farm Board except that it may cancel such part of any loan or advance, and only such part, as it ascertains to be not recoverable from the borrower.

(b) To sell to the said board at such price, not exceeding the market price, as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture all cotton now owned by them or acquired by them under the provisions of section (a).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have gone over this amendment. I have no objection to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to state briefly what is the important distinction between the amendment and the language of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is that the new board shall buy from the old board at the market price, except in the few instances where the carrying charges may be involved. In other words, it fixes the market price as the basis of the negotiations between the two boards. It seems to me it is a very proper matter. Otherwise, one board could pay any price it saw fit to the other.

I hope the amendment to the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have agreed, so far as I am concerned, to this amendment to the amendment.

Now I want to make just a brief statement about this bill.

If it is in order now, I should like to have the amendment that has been proposed by the Senator from Tennessee adopted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to make some observations upon this amendment, and I prefer to make them later on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the amendment be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is debatable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before there is any debate on this amendment I prefer to make my statement. I shall make it as brief as possible.

There is, and has been for several years, held over the market of cotton this Government owned and controlled cotton. We have now in sight practically a 2-year supply of actual cotton, physical cotton. The great problem with us is how to get rid of the cotton, and also how a reduction of acreage can be brought about.

The Government has already invested its money in this cotton. Now the proposition is—and we have had conferences with the different departments that hold this cotton—to take the cotton as it now stands, and to give an option to the grower so that he can have a stake in this cotton held by the Government at the price that the Government has the money invested in it, if he will agree to reduce his production bale for bale in accordance with the amount of cotton that is sold to him by the Government.

There are approximately 3,000,000 bales held by the Government. If I produce 100 bales of cotton, the Government enters into a contract with me that it will give me an option on part of this cotton at this price if I will reduce my acreage bale for bale with the amount on which I take an option.

Suppose I am contemplating making 100 bales. The Government sells to me 50 bales and holds the cotton as collateral against my contract. I agree not to produce, in 1933, in excess of 50 bales. When the sale is to take place, if these 3,000,000 bales are then allocated among the growers, it means a reduction in the American cotton crop of 1933 to the amount of 3,000,000 bales of cotton. The farmer, however, still has an option in the cotton that is already existing. That means that we not only get him to reduce his acreage—which is the only hope for the South and for the Nation, so far as the billion dollars is concerned that up to 1929 came into this country in exchange for the exportation of raw cotton—but we give him an opportunity to recover some of the disastrous loss that he has sustained by virtue of the terrible condition in which the country finds itself.

When August 15 comes he exercises his option. The cotton then becomes the property of the producer, less the amount that the Government has invested in it. It is not a question here of setting up another farm board and having another Government agency. Six men are appointed who shall be the officers to receive these contracts and to dispose of this cotton, and they serve without pay, except their necessary expenses.

If we can reduce the cotton crop from three to four million bales, and at the same time give the producers a stake in that which the Government already has on hand, the Government stands not to lose a penny, for it holds the cotton as collateral against the contract, while the farmer stands to make the difference between what the Government has invested in the cotton and the advance in the market.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do I correctly understand that the system is predicated entirely upon the assurance that there will be an increase in the price of cotton?

Mr. SMITH. It is not upon that assurance; it is the inevitable doom of the cotton that the Government holds now, if we make another crop this year, if there is not a substantial reduction in acreage—every cotton man in the world will understand that—and, if we do have such a reduction, we have a prospect of a rise in price. If we make a crop, it means that the cotton the Government now has will be greatly depreciated in value unless it is disposed of at once, and if it is that will break the market; and if the Government holds it, and there is a prospect of an increased production this year, the Government stands to lose still.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it correct to say that the primary purposes of the bill are as follows:

First, to concentrate the holdings of existing surpluses in one authority.

Mr. SMITH. In one authority.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Second, to reduce production by the amount of the existing surplus.

Mr. SMITH. Right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Third, to dispose of that surplus in an orderly way.

Mr. SMITH. Right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And, fourth, to give producers the benefit of any rise in price which is likely to occur by reason of the reduction of production approximately three and a half million bales.

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The statement of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], I think, is almost, if not entirely, correct. The whole theory of the bill is that upon the absorption of the existing surplus there will result a rise in price; at least, there can be expected no reduction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is precisely what I am trying to find out. I am not critical of the Senator's program. I sympathize fully with his objective. I want to know the mechanics of the matter. In the unexpected event, the fatal event, that the price of cotton continues to go down, would there be a loss to the Government in the operation of the plan?

Mr. SMITH. Not a penny more than there would be as the matter now stands.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, the Senator means that the present holdings would go down with the market?

Mr. SMITH. Why, certainly; so that the Government does not stand to lose a penny.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But there is this difference: The proposal assures a reduction to the amount of the present surplus.

Mr. SMITH. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And everyone who has studied the subject concedes that it is the existing surplus that is depressing unduly the price. If the surplus be concentrated and then disposed of by what is practically an absorption during the next year by reason of the reduction that is required, it is expected that some rise in price will take place.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I pursue this matter just one step further?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How much Federal credit would be involved in the course of this process?

Mr. SMITH. Credit of the Federal Government?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Not a penny beyond what is now involved.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Which is how much?

Mr. SMITH. It is whatever amount of cotton it is up to at the present market price.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the plan really contemplates the possibility of private financing of this arrangement. I have been assured that if such an arrangement could be authorized sources of private revenue would become available, and the Government would be relieved, although, as I understand it, there is provision in the bill which authorizes loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I am getting to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that, with assurance that the production was to be diminished, anyone who had money to lend would be inclined to invest in that sort of security, because if a reduction of three and a half million bales in the cotton crop does not tend to stabilize or increase the price of cotton, I do not know how that end could be accomplished by any action which might be taken on behalf of the producers with the existence of the surplus that has depressed the price below what everyone concedes to be a fair standard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I say further, in answer to the question of the Senator from Michigan, that whatever is paid out, if it is borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, will be paid to the governmental agency known as the Farm Board. So that the Government is just getting the money from one of its corporations and turning it over to another.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator from Tennessee entirely accurate? The Senator will see, if he will read section 4 of the bill, that under that section there is no limitation to the acquisition of cotton by this board which is to be set up to that which is now controlled by subsidiaries of the Farm Board, but they can go out, under section 4, and purchase all the cotton there is in the United States, and at the expense of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the very question that arises in the mind of the Senator from Utah rose also in my mind, and I have an amendment prepared to section 4, that this provision shall expire on June 30, 1933, so as to prevent just the thing the Senator desires to prevent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina pardon me further?

Mr. SMITH. Just let me explain section 4. There is held by some of the banks throughout the South cotton of individual farmers; and I would like to have the Senate give me its attention now. They have borrowed 4 or 5 cents a pound on that cotton. The banks are in such a distressed condition that they are likely to put that cotton on the market now.

This bill provides that the board to be set up can take cotton at the amount a bank holds against it, put it into a pool, and then get from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that amount, and hold the cotton, if the owner thereof agrees to reduce his acreage by just the number of bales that are thus taken into the pool.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if that were done, it would mean that there would just be that much greater limitation on the crop to be produced this year.

Mr. SMITH. Just that much; and that is the main object we have, because in order for a farmer to get relief through this measure he would have to agree that he would reduce his acreage in the amount of the cotton thus pooled for him.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to revert to the question I was asking the Senator before. Section 6 states that "The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed"—not only authorized, but directed—"to advance money and to make loans," and so forth. I want to know what prospective investment is involved under section 6.

Mr. SMITH. I have just described the process. The banks have the privilege now. The banks could go and put up the cotton as collateral, with other security, and hold the cotton for the farmer. But the banks are not doing that. So that I maintain that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can take this cotton at the price the bank has loaned on it, as collateral, and advance that amount to the bank to hold the cotton against the reduction of acreage by the individual. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is financing cotton now, and this direction to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to give this board the same access to them, with the cotton as collateral, as the banks now have.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Has the Senator made an estimate of the capital account that might be involved at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the operation of section 6?

Mr. SMITH. That is almost impossible of determination. We all confidently expect, if this bill goes through and cotton begins to advance, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may not have to advance on any cotton whatever, because the banks will then say, "With that improvement in the matter of the quantity, we will hold the cotton for this man if he will sign." We wanted to make it safe, so that this surplus cotton shall not be dumped on the market or duplicated in production this year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator say there is any limitation in this bill which would prevent the new cotton board from broadening its stabilization program and paraphrasing what the Federal Farm Board can do?

Mr. SMITH. I want to assure the Senator that I am, by this bill, doing all I can to get the Government out of this business and give the farmers an option on all this cotton.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is not section 4 a straight license to an unlimited speculation?

Mr. SMITH. It is limited to producers of cotton.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Michigan that the question he is asking about section 4 came to my mind and to the minds of other men interested in cotton. We went over the matter very carefully, and I have an amendment which I intend to offer, and which I will ask the Senator from South Carolina to accept, reading in some such words as these, "Provided, That this privilege shall expire June 30, 1933." It has been suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] that he thinks that ought to be limited to May 1, and I agree with him. The Senator from South Carolina is perfectly willing to accept that amendment, so that it will be allowed to go on only until May 1 and be applicable to producers only. I think that will cover the defect the Senator from Michigan has in mind.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, by way of further illumination, and translating this thing into a situation which I might better understand, will the Senator tell me whether this same system would work in respect to wheat?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am asking the author of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. The wheat people two or three years ago suggested a plan of this kind, but there is now practically no wheat owned by the Government. There would have to be an appropriation so that the Government could go out and buy it. Under this bill, the Government would not buy any cotton, except what is indicated in section 4.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. KING. That which is indicated in section 4 means all the cotton in the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is practically very little in the hands of the producers at this time.

Mr. SMITH. It is almost negligible.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is almost negligible, but with the amendment that this privilege shall expire May 1, 1933, it would be reduced to a minimum, in my judgment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I say that the board we propose to set up, six members of which are to come from the cotton States, will finance the cotton that is held by the producers.

Let us suppose there is a small farmer who is hoping that he might get enough out of his cotton to meet his obligations, and he hypothecates his cotton, and borrows from the bank, say, 5 cents a pound. The bank, on account of the accumulated interest and storage charges, says the farmer must sell it. He comes to this board and says, "I have 30 bales of cotton. I want to put that cotton into this pool and have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation take the cotton as security, and I will agree not to reproduce an equal amount in the 1933 crop." That would result in melting down the surplus, reduce the acreage, and give an opportunity for the cotton to rise in price, but with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, the board would ascertain what farmers were in need of assistance, and if they were willing to put their cotton into the pool and reduce their acreage by May 1, the whole thing could be consummated.

Mr. McKELLAR. The act to be confined entirely to producers.

Mr. SMITH. To producers.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. I assume the purpose of the provision in section 4 of the bill was to enable the board to be set up to allot a certain number of bales in proportion to the amount of acreage reduced by the cotton farmer.

Mr. SMITH. That is right.

Mr. HEBERT. That being so, would it not be well to limit the operation of section 4 in order that the board may purchase sufficient quantities of cotton so as to enable it to make the allotment if it be necessary?

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will read section 4, he will see that it is to be automatic. No purchase can be made from a producer unless the owner of the cotton agrees that he will reduce his production just in proportion to the number of bales he puts up.

Mr. HEBERT. But, if the Senator will permit me another interruption, I am speaking of the activities of the Government in this process. The idea is that the Government is to hold under an option that number of bales by which the production is reduced by the planter.

Mr. SMITH. That is right.

Mr. HEBERT. If the Government now has enough cotton on hand to supply those options to the planters, why purchase any more?

Mr. SMITH. There is not enough. There is really not enough to go clear around, but there is enough to assure an appreciable decrease of the surplus and a rise in price.

Let me suggest to the Senator that under the system of crop-production loans now being operated there is a provision that no cotton farmer may get any money to make a crop unless he agrees in writing and under a contract that he will reduce his acreage 30 per cent. We are hoping that when the fund under that act is exhausted the proposed law will carry out the purpose we have in mind to such an extent that we may be guaranteed such a production as will call for the consumption of the remaining surplus.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I can understand the process through which it is proposed to go, and I understand, too, that the Government may not have a sufficient supply on hand with which to furnish options to the planters.

Mr. SMITH. To all the planters.

Mr. HEBERT. To all the planters. So I would provide in section 4 that the board be authorized to acquire so many bales as might be necessary to make up the deficiency.

Mr. SMITH. I have met objection to that from the Senator from Utah. That would suit me exactly, if the cotton could be gotten at a price that would warrant the investment. But we wanted to try this plan in conjunction with the farm-production loan plan, and the prospects are that the result will be a reduction in the cotton crop, certainly to the extent of 3,000,000 bales, if this measure shall be enacted, and then a 30 per cent reduction on the part of all those who avail themselves of the crop-production loan.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I see much promise in the bill as it is explained to the Senate by the Senator from South Carolina. But the Senator has not answered my suggestion as to why that would not be effective if put into the bill.

Mr. SMITH. If the board could acquire sufficient cotton to give an option to every grower to the amount of 50 per cent, it would be ideal; but in an attempt to get that cotton it might be that the price would rise to such a point that there would be no margin at all for the allocation. So we have to take what we can get.

Mr. HEBERT. If that does produce a rise in the market, it will be beneficial to the planter anyway.

Mr. SMITH. It will be beneficial unless it induces such a rise immediately as perhaps to cause them not to sign the contract.

Mr. HEBERT. It seems to me the minute they see the effect of the bill upon cotton production, the producers, seeing the rise in the market, would want to do that very thing and reduce their crop.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble about it is that that plan might possibly give rise to a larger surplus in the hands of the Government, and that is what we do not want to deal with any more. We believe by the operation of this bill that we can substantially, within one year, get rid of the entire surplus by making these contracts with the producers. If we can do that, it will be the greatest thing we have ever done, not only for cotton but for the entire country, because if there is a reduction in the crop the present year and a consequent rise in the value of cotton, it will mean a great deal, not only to the cotton producer but to the entire country.

Mr. SMITH. I want to make one further observation to the Senator from Michigan to show the disaster in the present slump in the price of cotton. In 1929 the American cotton crop, 60 per cent of which we export, brought $1,558,000,000. In 1928 it brought $1,460,000,000. In 1931 it brought $500,000,000. The Senator can now understand why not only the banks of the South melted like snow in the sunshine but why the mills of the country—all the cotton mills—are standing face to face with ruin and bankruptcy, and why some of the larger banks of the country have gone under. That was brought about by the menace of this tremendous surplus. If we can reduce that surplus and at the same time give the producer a stake to a certain per cent in what is already existing, we are trying the first plan that has ever offered a profit or an inducement to the farmer to reduce his acreage, outside of the hope of an increased price on the reduced production. Not only do we give him that but we give him a stake in that which is already existing.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina how many individual farmers are involved in the prospective contracts?

Mr. SMITH. I could not say. That would be problematical.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In a general way?

Mr. SMITH. In a general way, perhaps some 2,000,000 or 3,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does that involve a serious problem in mechanics in the administration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH. No. We have the machinery already set up in the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The existing mechanism can be used?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; it is all set up.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would like to invite the Senator's attention to one point, possibly minor in its nature, and yet I find a challenge in it. When he is defining the qualifications for the members of the cotton board he provides that they must be qualified and experienced either in the purchasing, handling, or production of cotton. I should say that is quite necessary. But in addition to that does the Senator think it is necessary to require that they shall all be residents of cotton-producing States when after all he is dealing with the credit of the whole Federal Government?

Mr. SMITH. The reason why I did that, and I think the Senator will join with me when he understands it, is that we have had the habit of appointing men to discharge certain duties who did not know the A B C's of the problem.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 4, line 18——

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; there is an amendment pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH. So far as I am concerned I have accepted the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, and as soon as that is disposed of the Senator from Michigan can offer his amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is with reluctance that I take the floor in opposition to the pending bill. I have not objected to its consideration, but I can not reconcile myself to vote for its passage. In my opinion it is not founded upon sound principles or safe policies. It continues the Federal Government in activities foreign to the purpose for which it is organized and beyond its legitimate constitutional authority. The limitations upon the Federal Government seem to have been ignored and a policy of expediency entered upon. It has been the boast of the Democratic Party that it was a defender of local self-government, of the rights of the State, and of the prerogatives of individuals. Both political parties have inveighed against the Federal Government entering the fields of business activity and of asserting a power to control indirectly business activities which concededly are within the domain of private endeavor. This bill attempts to coerce agriculturists engaged in the cotton business into contracts with the Federal Government and confers upon a governmental agency almost dictatorial powers in dealing with persons who are the owners of cotton or who are engaged in the production of cotton. It provides that producers of cotton, if they will restrict their planting and crop production, may obtain a contract from the governmental agency created by the bill to purchase from such agency the quantity of cotton which would have been produced if they had not refrained from limiting their planting. This bill makes the Government a bargainer and contractor with the thousands of cotton producers in the United States. It establishes a relation of debtor and creditor, of contractor and contractee, between individuals and the Government; it projects the Government into the cotton business on a scale heretofore never conceived of. It authorizes the Government to not only purchase all of the cotton which may be owned and held by existing governmental agencies but under section 4 it authorizes the board created by the bill to acquire by purchase any other cotton owned by the producers in the United States.

Mr. President, we are witnessing during these days radical departures from the paths of safety which were regarded as prudent by the fathers of this Republic. We are converting our Government into a gigantic mechanism and endowing it with authority and powers coveted by autocrats but denied by those who framed the Constitution and the National Government. If the Federal Government in peace times may use the taxing power to obtain funds for the purpose of engaging in the buying and selling of cotton, then there would seem to be no restriction upon its authority to engage in any and every form of private business. It is claimed that this enormous power to confer upon the Government to buy substantially all of the cotton now owned and held by thousands, if not tens of thousands, of individuals will be beneficial to the owners of the cotton, because the plan contemplates that the commodities so purchased shall be sold at higher prices, which will thus advantage the purchasers. Apparently this scheme does not take into account the consumers—those who will have to buy the clothing and commodities into the composition of which the cotton must enter. Broadly, if I understand the situation, this is a plan to increase the prices of cotton and to use the credit of the Government and funds which it must provide in order to accomplish that end. It is obvious that this measure will be regarded as a precedent and for the adoption of a similar policy with respect to other commodities. If the Government may purchase millions of bales of cotton and hold the same, and sell it at its pleasure, then we may expect demands for the Government to take over other commodities and hold and dispose of the same. It is conceded, as I understand, that the purpose is to raise prices, and the claim is made that the plan embodied in this bill will accomplish that result.

May I pause a moment to inquire whether this is the function of the Federal Government to use its great powers, and funds obtained from taxes imposed upon all of the people, to enter into the market and purchase substantially all of a given commodity in order that through this monopolistic control the prices of such commodity may be increased, though such increase will be reflected in increased prices to the consumers of such commodity or of products manufactured therefrom? If the Government may spend hundreds of billions of dollars to acquire five or six million bales of cotton and to hold the same, sustaining whatever losses that may result from its action, is there any reason why it should not be asked to purchase wheat or corn or other agricultural commodities, or the great stocks of lead, or zinc, or copper, or coal, and withhold them from the market until prices are forced to higher levels, thus compelling consumers to pay higher prices for the same?

Antitrust laws forbid monopolies, but this bill seeks to create a cotton monopoly. It may be urged that there is justification for a measure of this kind, because of the policy declared by the Government in the creation and operation of the Federal Farm Board. Nearly everyone admits that the Federal Farm Board act was a mistake; that it embarked the Government upon a dangerous, if not to say, disastrous policy; that it established a precedent which will be relied upon in the years to come for other unsound and unwise and meretricious enactments. The operations of the Federal Farm Board have been condemned almost universally. That organization has done much to demoralize agriculture and to injure the farmers of our country. It has squandered more than $300,000,000 and created an army of Federal employees that have vexed the country and disturbed legitimate business activities. It has acted with an audacity unparalleled and with a lack of wisdom and sound judgment characteristic of bureaucratic institutions. Notwithstanding its follies and mistakes, its representatives and some of its pampered beneficiaries are demanding a prolongation of its life and even the extension of its authority.

The unfortunate situation of the cotton producers in the United States is largely due to the unsound and indefensible policies of the Federal Farm Board. It created a cotton stabilization organization which, in turn, under the ægis and direction of the Federal Farm Board, caused to be organized what was called the American Cotton Cooperative Association. The Cotton Stabilization Corporation and the last-named organization have cost the taxpayers of the United States more than $200,000,000 and the Farm Board and the organization to handle wheat have added tens of millions of dollars to the Government's losses. Senators will recall that the Federal Farm Board, immediately after the organization of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, promptly paid $20,000,000 to insolvent cooperative cotton organizations and proceeded to take over the managers and executives of these insolvent and defunct so-called "cooperatives." This new creation, known as the American Cotton Cooperative Association, then under the guidance and direction of those who had contributed to the insolvency of various cooperatives, under the direction and with the approval of the stabilization corporation and the Federal Farm Board, proceeded to obtain from the Federal Farm Board tens of millions of dollars with which it improvidently and unwisely purchased cotton; it engaged in speculation and cotton transactions, incurring a loss of more than $63,000,000 which the taxpayers of the United States had to pay. This huge sum represents a difference in the value between the cost of cotton purchased by the American Cotton Cooperative Association at the Federal Farm Board's suggestion and its present-day value. There is a loss of at least $63,000,000 on the transactions of this organization.

The Federal Farm Board and its subsidiaries now hold, as I am advised, approximately 1,700,000 bales of cotton. I should add that the American Cotton Cooperative Association, after it was organized, had a paid-in capital of $79,500. It had an authorized capital of $30,000,000, but it was not a farmers' cooperative. It was an organization for speculative purposes and largely for the benefit of those who were in control of the same. With this small capital it proceeded to borrow from the Federal Farm Board a total of approximately $90,000,000, as shown by the second and third annual reports of the Federal Farm Board. The American Cotton Cooperative Association having caused these enormous losses to the Government, is now endeavoring, as I am advised, to preserve some assets which have been set aside but which belong to the Treasury of the United States, in order that the stupendous losses of the Federal Farm Board and its subsidiaries may obtain some little relief.

Mr. President, I repeat that the follies of the Farm Board, its departure from sound business methods, constitute the genesis of the bill before us. Their wrongs and transgressions against all sound business principles undoubtedly proved injurious to the cotton producers; but I repeat that the initial mistake and blunder was in the creation of the Farm Board. Immediately after its organization it adopted fantastic and absurd policies; it created organizations to speculate in wheat and cotton, and it loaned money in many instances where there was no justification for the extension of credit, and apparently for the object of destroying legitimate business. It flooded the country with agents and representatives, many of whom resorted to unfair representations to tear down industry and business institutions, to create bewilderment, suspicion, and animosities among agriculturists throughout the country. Its whole career has been strewn with the wrecks of business organizations and institutions which functioned to the advantage of the people and to the benefit of the country. The stabilization corporations which it set up have contributed to the wreck created, to the waste of Federal funds, and to the folly and extravagance with which the whole proceedings of the Farm Board and its subsidiaries must be branded.

It is said that these governmental agencies, having acquired enormous quantities of cotton, the result has been to demoralize the market, to prevent normal trade, to create doubt and uncertainty not only in the cotton and textile business but also to bring bankruptcies to many cotton producers and serious injury to many manufacturing institutions.

It is urged for this bill that it is imperative that the cotton controlled by the Government be gotten out of the hands of its subsidiaries and disposed of in a proper way so that the market may not be further demoralized, and that the price of cotton now held as well as that produced of the next cotton crop, may not be forced to the lowest levels to which cotton has ever been sold. This proposed legislation is justified, as I understand, because of the derelictions of the Government and the blunders to which I have so imperfectly referred, committed by the Farm Board, the Stabilization Corporation, and the American Cotton Cooperative Association.

Mr. President, I do not believe the bill will accomplish all that is claimed for it, and I can not support it because as I have imperfectly indicated, it rests upon unsound principles, governmental as well as economic. The mechanics of the bill are complicated and in its administration serious difficulties will be encountered. Of course, the plan may be rescued from complete defeat because the Public Treasury—through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—is to be placed back of it.

Permit me to briefly refer to the bill. It creates a new Federal agency, to be called a cotton board, having a membership of six persons. This board is to acquire all the cotton held by governmental agencies, and in addition, as provided in section 4, it is authorized to purchase any other cotton owned by producers thereof in any part of the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture, as Senators know, has in his possession approximately 800,000 bales of cotton which he has taken as security for loans made to farmers. My understanding is that the cotton producers have, if not the legal title, at least an equitable title in this cotton. The Secretary of Agriculture has loaned upon this cotton, as I am told, 3 cents a pound more than the market price. The loss to the Government if settlement were made now would be many millions of dollars. Apparently the Agriculture Department was not unwilling to follow in the footsteps of the Farm Board and its subsidiaries. At any rate it bids fair to increase the already stupendous deficit resulting from the operations of the Federal Government during the past few years.

The bill provides that the Secretary and the Farm Board and its agencies shall sell to this new Federal creation known as the cotton board all the cotton which is under their control. Of course, this new cotton board has no money, and whatever payments are required or expenses incurred provision must be made to meet the same by the Federal Government. The agency to furnish this money, as provided further in the bill, is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Apparently that organization is to be the umbrella under which a multitude of derelicts and insolvents are to find refuge. It is to furnish money for railroads (and the record shows that many of them are insolvent), and bankrupt and other agencies, organizations, and activities; but it has no money, and the Treasury must provide the same, and that means, of course, the sale of bonds which the taxpayers ultimately have to meet.

But to return to the bill: This board is to take over all this cotton and make settlements for the same in order that it may acquire full legal title to all such cotton. The board is also authorized to purchase the cotton previously transferred by the Government to the Red Cross for relief purposes. It is worthy of note that 500,000 bales of cotton last year were delivered to the Red Cross to be used for the unemployed. This cotton had liens and charges against it amounting to nearly $40,000,000, and the Treasury of the United States was compelled to advance this sum to be in turn, as stated, paid by the taxpayers of the country. Only a few days ago 350,000 bales of cotton controlled by the Farm Board and its subsidiaries were acquired and transferred to the Red Cross. There were liens and charges against this cotton amounting to more than $10,000,000, and an appropriation was obtained from the Treasury of the United States to pay a portion of these charges.

This bill now proposes to buy this cotton which was turned over to the Red Cross, if it has not disposed of the same, and then probably have the board sell it back to the Red Cross. A rather unique circle of activities is presented. The Farm Board furnishes money to the stabilization corporation and the latter and the Farm Board furnish money to the American Cotton Cooperative Association, and it enters the market and buys cotton from producers, the prices being far in advance of the market price, upon which the losses are great, and it then sells this cotton back to the Government, which transfers it to the Red Cross; and now this bill provides that the Government shall buy it back again and then resell it to the Red Cross.

I have referred to section 4, which authorizes the purchase of all the cotton in the United States owned by the producers thereof. Perhaps most of this cotton is pledged to banks or persons who have extended credit to the cotton producers. Under this bill, as stated, the cotton board is authorized to purchase all this cotton, and section 6 of the bill states that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—is hereby authorized and directed to advance money and make loans to the board in such amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon, etc.

As stated, there are several million bales of cotton owned by producers in the United States. To acquire all this cotton and to purchase that owned by the Farm Board and its subsidiaries and the Red Cross would require, perhaps, the stupendous sum of one and a quarter billion dollars.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator know why section 3 was added? I can not understand its purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to answer the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The purpose of that provision was to do away with the outstanding surplus as far as possible by making it available to reduce acreage. That is all.

Mr. COPELAND. But the Red Cross had already been given that cotton.

Mr. McKELLAR. But they have not used it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The whole purpose is to enable the board to take over this lot of cotton which is still being administered as a Government project. The Red Cross has been given the cotton. The Red Cross is not a cotton merchant. All of its operations are disturbing and disorganizing to the trade. The Red Cross is simply selling the cotton and with the proceeds is buying goods to be delivered over to the needy. The only thought in putting this provision in the bill is to authorize the acquisition of that lot of cotton as a lot, if it were possible to obtain it from the Red Cross. Of course if they have already sold it there would be none they could supply.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not want to take the time of the Senator from Utah, but later I shall want to say something about this provision myself.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill as reported authorizes the Farm Board to give credit to certain organizations, with which it has been dealing, on obligations due to the Farm Board from those subsidiary organizations for the money which has been loaned and which has been wasted. I have an amendment which I shall offer at the appropriate time, relating to the settlement of accounts between the subsidiaries such as the stabilization corporation and the American Cotton Cooperative Association, which will require the latter organization, which has some assets, to turn them over to the Farm Board instead of profiting by its unwise and injurious conduct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Farm Board only gets the market price for the cotton in the settlement?

Mr. KING. Yes; but I want the Farm Board to obtain from the stabilization corporation and the American Cotton Cooperative Association whatever assets they may have, because they have caused losses to the Farm Board, and, of course, to the United States, of approximately $200,000,000, and if they have any assets, in the adjustment of the accounts between them, they should become the property of the Farm Board and its subsidiary organizations.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with everything the Senator says about the Farm Board.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I particularly object to section 4, to which attention was called by the Senator from Michigan. Let us examine that for just a moment. It provides—

SEC. 4. The board shall also be authorized to acquire by purchase at the market value thereof any other cotton owned by the producers thereof in all cases in which such producers will agree in writing to reduce their acreage planted in cotton in the manner hereinafter set out.

I am told, Mr. President, that there are between two and four million bales of cotton, directly or indirectly, controlled by producers, the legal title to which is in the producers, upon which some of the consumers have borrowed considerable sums of money, but, nevertheless, the producers under this provision would find a market for all the cotton, whether two or four million bales, which they may own. Now——

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me finish the sentence.

Mr. GEORGE. Would it not be fair to say that they have the same market now, because the board can not buy for more than the market price?

Mr. KING. That may be true.

Mr. GEORGE. They buy on the market at the market price; they have to do that.

Mr. KING. But, Mr. President, I object to the Government, having made such improvident contracts in the past, resulting in losses of approximately $200,000,000 from cotton transactions, buying more cotton, and not only buying 1,700,000 bales of cotton now under the control of the Stabilization Corporation and the American Cotton Cooperative Association and 800,000 bales from the Agricultural Department, but acquiring from two to four million bales more owned and controlled by cotton producers in the United States. In other words, we are proposing to have the Federal Government become the holder, the possessor, the purchaser, the distributor, the broker of most of the cotton in the United States to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I suggest to the Senator that I have proposed an amendment to this section, and the Senator from South Carolina has accepted it, providing that this privilege to buy shall expire on May 1, 1933, which greatly minimizes the difficulty to which the Senator refers.

Mr. KING. Replying to the suggestion just made by the Senator from Tennessee, I agree that the amendment proposed minimizes the danger, but nevertheless the board to be created by the bill, the personnel of which is to be exclusively from the cotton States, may within 24 hours after this bill becomes law, if it desires, purchase substantially all the cotton in the United States; and under the terms of the bill——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence—under the terms of the bill the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not only authorized but is directed—and that language seems to be compulsory—to advance sufficient money to purchase all the cotton in the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that those who collaborated in drawing this bill restricted it to the producers. The Senator says "all the cotton in the United States." The board may only buy it from the producers.

Mr. McKELLAR. And only before May 1.

Mr. SMITH. That is correct; and only before May 1.

Mr. KING. I concede that the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Tennessee improves the bill. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his suggestion.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me also call the Senator's attention to the fact that the board can buy only from the producers who will agree to reduce their acreage planted to cotton by the quantity which such purchase represents.

Mr. KING. Perhaps my statement was a little too broad. I assumed that all the cotton in the United States was either held by the Government or its subsidiaries or by producers who have an interest therein which is held in warehouses and by brokers, and so on, in the United States. Probably that which has been acquired by mills would not come within the limitations of the provisions of section 4, but we know that, in view of the depression, the acquisition of cotton by mills to-day is really from day to day, from hand to mouth, so that they have no considerable amount in their possession. At any rate, the producers of the United States, according to the information given to me by some cotton men, own to-day between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 bales of cotton upon much of which, it is true, they have borrowed money, but the legal, or equitable title is in them, and immediately if this bill should become law that cotton which those producers own, legally or equitably, could be acquired and would be acquired by the board, because that is the purpose of the bill. The purpose is to get control of all the cotton, so far as possible, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has no option when the board demands money for the purchase of cotton; it must supply the money required to pay for the same.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator permit me to say that this measure does not add one single power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which it does not possess under existing law, unless the Senator wishes to take exception to the word "directed." The power is in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to do precisely this thing at this time, but the intent is to authorize the board, rather than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to deal with this particular type of marketing operations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope that my friend from Georgia does not think that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation feels that there is any obligation now resting upon it, legally or morally, to loan money to all the holders of cotton in the United States whether producers or bankers; to brokers, mills, and producers, and also to the auxiliaries of the Government?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know what obligation is resting on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but the same obligation is resting upon it to finance any sort of marketing enterprise in farm products that rests upon it to finance the railroads and the banks.

Mr. KING. My friend from Georgia must concede that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has some limitations to which it is subject. Certainly it can not respond to all the demands for credit that may come from cotton producers or from public or private organizations. If it met all demands, the Treasury of the United States would be unable to furnish the needed funds.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, there is a limitation on it, because there is a limitation on the entire amount that it can advance, and, of course, there is a limitation here, because it makes no advance except upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator from Georgia know what limitation in the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act applies in dollars and cents to the section under which he says similar loans now can be made?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not recall the dollars and cents provision.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to suggest to the Senator that he might find it necessary, if this measure is to be effective and practicable, to increase the limitation in that act.

Mr. GEORGE. We would not seek to do that, because they are bound by whatever limitations that act imposes, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But the Senator does not know how much money they may be permitted to expend.

Mr. GEORGE. I would not want to increase it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And, therefore, the Senator does not know whether that limit would be practical in carrying out the plan of this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. The plan of this bill would necessarily be limited by that limitation, whatever it is; they can not go beyond that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand that; but the Senator is unable to tell me whether that limitation is sufficient to make this bill practicable.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it is sufficient to make the bill practicable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If it is sufficient, what is the limitation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the limitation is $3,800,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the total limitation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But what is the limitation of the subdivisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will be pleased to ascertain the facts and advise the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the question, I believe, was propounded by the Senator from Michigan a few moments ago as to the possible or probable draft which would be made upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in carrying out the provisions of this bill. My recollection is that no answer was given—or, if so, I do not recall it. Mr. President, the measure before us gives no indication of the demands which will be made for Federal funds if this bill becomes law. The amount required to purchase and hold and sell all the cotton which it is designed shall be handled by the cotton board may be a $50,000,000 or $500,000,000. No one can tell. If there are 6,000,000 bales of cotton in the United States and cotton is worth $25 a bale, the amount required would exceed $1,000,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. As I understand the situation now, what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may do is permissive, but under the terms of this bill, as the Senator has pointed out, it could be directed to buy the cotton, regardless of what consequences might occur, and what might happen to other interests in other parts of our country.

Mr. KING. I think that the Senator having the bill in charge should, upon his own motion, agree to strike out the words "and directed" so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would not be compelled to loan money to the cotton board.

I am advised sotto voce by my friends Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. SMITH that they will consent to the suggestion to strike out the words "and directed" and so I pretermit any further discussion of that particular provision of the bill. I do, however, if the Senate will indulge me, return to section 4 of this bill. I think Senators ought to consent to eliminate that provision. If they shall eliminate it, I shall, after I submit two amendments, which I am sure they will accept, withdraw any objection to the bill.

Mr. President, I wish to make a few general observations in regard to this matter.

The Federal Farm Board, having disposed of all the wheat and the cotton it accumulated as part of the stabilization operations, ought to be abolished, but I find a bill before us, which we will take up probably to-day or Monday, continuing the Farm Board and giving it a new lease on life and an appropriation of $500,000 with which to pay the expenses of its employees for the next fiscal year or a part of the next fiscal year only.

The operations of the board were chiefly to attempt to stabilize prices of agricultural commodities, and an attempt was made greatly to enlarge the cooperative marketing program.

I want to say that cooperative marketing associations were proceeding in an orderly and in a progressive way until the Farm Board bill was passed. I think that measure—which received the benediction of President Hoover, and of which he is the father—is in part responsible for the demoralization of agriculture.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I make a suggestion to the Senator? The Senator said that his principal objection was to striking out section 4.

Mr. KING. Yes; but there are other features of the bill which are very objectionable. As I stated a few moments ago, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then he said he had two amendments. Will the Senator suggest what those amendments are?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have two prepared, but intended to offer several more.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will tell the Senator why I make that request. It may be that we can arrange to meet the Senator's views in regard to striking out section 4, if the amendments can be stated.

Mr. KING. The first one I am sure the Senator will accept. It is to add at the end of line 20, on the last page of the bill, after the word "section," the following:

Provided, That no salary or compensation shall be paid to any person in excess of that paid to Federal employees for like or similar services.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am perfectly willing to accept that, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina will.

Mr. SMITH. I will.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from South Carolina ask unanimous consent that that amendment may be made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know; but the Senator can perfect his bill.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the pendency of any amendment—this does not relate to the amendment which is under consideration—the amendment I have just suggested be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator please state the amendment again?

Mr. KING. On page 7, after the word "section," change the period to a colon and then add the following words:

Provided, That no salary or compensation shall be paid to any person in excess of that paid to Federal employees for like or similar services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now what is the other amendment?

Mr. KING. The other amendment I have called to the attention of the Senator from Tennessee, and we are not in disagreement. The only question is, he thinks that the amendment which he has suggested covers the matter. I do not.

Let me make myself clear first.

The American Cotton Cooperative Association claims to have made some profit in its speculations in cotton and in its alleged cooperative transactions; if it did, it made the profit by unloading the losses resulting from its operations and which it ought to have paid, upon the stabilization corporation, and the stabilization corporation upon the Farm Board. The American Cotton Cooperative Association has, I am told, from five to ten or fifteen millions of cash and liquid assets. Mr. Creekmore and his associates desire to perpetuate this organization, claiming it to be a cooperative association when it is not, and to keep their hands upon whatever assets it may possess.

That organization owes the stabilization corporation and the Farm Boards tens of millions of dollars growing out of its speculations and unsound practices. I insist that those assets in the hands of the American Cotton Cooperative organization be delivered to the Farm Board, thus effecting a pro tanto settlement of its gigantic indebtedness to the Farm Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where would that amendment come in?

Mr. KING. Following the Senator's amendment about salaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. The first one?

Mr. KING. Yes. I think it can be properly integrated there:

Provided, That in making such settlements the Farm Board shall, before allowing any credits to any organization or subsidiary—

That is, the stabilization corporation or the American Cotton Cooperative organization—to which it has loaned money, obtain a transfer of all assets of every kind, character, and description owned, held, or possessed by it, and the value of such assets so transferred may by said Farm Board be credited upon any amount due it from said debtor organization or subsidiary.

The bill as drawn contemplates that there shall be a settlement of the accounts due from the subsidiary to the Farm Board. I want this subsidiary organization in that settlement to turn over to the Farm Board any assets that it has.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator means any assets pertaining to cotton?

Mr. KING. Yes; exactly.

Mr. SMITH. I think the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee covers that ground exactly.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will accept this amendment, I shall discuss it no further.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can we not vote on the amendment now, and have the Senator offer that as an amendment to it? I imagine it would be agreed to.

Mr. KING. All right.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have a vote on the amendment that I offered?

Mr. COPELAND. Let it be stated, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee proposes to strike out all of section 2, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture, the Farm Board and all other departments and agencies of the Government are hereby directed:

(a) To take such action and to make such settlements as are necessary in order to acquire full legal title to all cotton on which money has been loaned or advanced by them upon such terms as they may deem fair and just: Provided, That no amount in excess of outstanding advances to individual producers and charges paid or accrued for storage, transportation, insurance, and interest against the cotton so acquired shall be allowed by the Farm Board in such settlement: Provided further, That if the amount of such advances and charges on the actual cotton so acquired can not be determined, no amount in excess of the market value of the cotton shall be allowed by the Farm Board except that it may cancel such part of any loan or advance, and only such part, as it ascertains to be not recoverable from the borrower.

(b) To sell to the said board at such price, not exceeding the market price, as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture all cotton now owned by them or acquired by them under the provisions of section (a).

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question.

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not his amendment or this bill tends to continue the Farm Board in the cotton business, or to get the Farm Board out of the cotton business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite the contrary; it gets the Farm Board out of the cotton business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment which I offer would be subdivision (c), and I offer it to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of the amendment the following:

(c) That in making such settlements the Farm Board shall, before allowing any credits to any organization or subsidiary to which it has loaned money, obtain a transfer of all assets of every kind, character, and description owned, held, or possessed by it, and the value of such assets so transferred may by said Farm Board be credited upon any amount due it from said debtor organization or subsidiary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see no objection to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out section 4. That, I believe, was agreed to awhile ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 4, reading as follows:

The board shall also be authorized to acquire by purchase at the market value thereof any other cotton owned by the producers thereof in all cases in which such producers will agree in writing to reduce their acreage planted in cotton in the manner hereinafter set out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, Mr. President, one more amendment that the Senator from South Carolina has offered.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to clear up a matter before we go any further. I think it is in doubt.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. WALCOTT. The Senator from Utah mentioned it, but I did not hear any vote on it. I refer to the striking out of two words in the second line of page 6, section 6—"and directed."

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes!

Mr. SMITH. That has gone out.

Mr. McKELLAR. That has gone out by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. I suggested that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been no vote on it yet.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that those words be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves to strike out, on page 6, line 2, the words "and directed."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now I offer the next amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 8 to read as follows:

SEC. 8. The board shall sell the cotton held by it at its discretion: Provided, That it shall dispose of all cotton held by it by March 1, 1935: Provided further, That the board is authorized to sell unlimited amounts at any time at a price equivalent to not less than 10 cents basis middling, seven-eighths inch staple, at the ports can be procured.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator allow that amendment to be adopted?

Mr. KING. May I suggest this to the Senator: Is not this a better amendment? I am not sufficiently familiar with the cotton business to know:

The board shall sell the cotton held by it prior to August 15, 1935, as follows: Thirty-five per cent between August 15, 1933, and February 15, 1934——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am familiar with that amendment. If the Senator will allow me, every man familiar with the cotton business knows that if we set any definite time at which anyone holding cotton must dispose of it he is at the mercy of those who more or less control the cotton market.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator; but it seems to me that if they have the discretion they will hold it just as the Farm Board has been holding wheat and cotton; and if it is piled up, we will have a mountain of cotton instead of having a diminishing quantity.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator about it, and first offered the very amendment that the Senator now suggests; but upon conferring with the Senator from South Carolina and others about it, we have modified it as has been suggested, and I hope the Senator will let it go through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, several Senators have inquired of me what was the attitude of the textile manufacturers of the North toward this measure. They were violently opposed to the so-called allotment bill. I am surprised to find that they are in accord with the textile manufacturers of the South and with the cotton planters in favoring the pending measure.

I want to read one of the many telegrams I have received, which indicates the view many textile manufacturers have taken of this legislation:

BOSTON, MASS., February 18, 1933.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate:

Cotton relief bill, proposed by Senators SMITH and GEORGE, we consider admirable. This plan should result in material curtailment in planting and result in price improvement not only for the farmer but for all textile industry. Prompt action is of vital importance if it is to affect this year's crop and bring the desired relief to agriculture and industry so necessary at this time. We commend to you the Smith bill as a substitute for the proposed Jones domestic allotment bill which we regard as unsound, highly destructive, and unworkable.

WATERMAN CURRIER & CO. (INC.).

Several similar telegrams have come to me, and I ask unanimous consent to have them inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The telegrams are as follows:

SALEM, MASS., February 10, 1933.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

National Association Cotton Manufacturers indorse Smith bill (S. 5122). Still opposed to so-called domestic allotment plan. Please advise status of Smith bill and suggest any way in which we can help.

ERNEST N. HOOD, President.

GREENVILLE, S. C., February 17, 1933.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate:

As you know, I am very much opposed to the so-called allotment bill. Believe Smith cotton bill would be of real benefit to cotton growers and mill interests. Hope you will support it in the Senate.

B. H. BRISTOW DRAPER.

BOSTON, MASS., February 16, 1933.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate Office Building:

Understand substitute farm allotment plan bill, known as Smith bill (S. 5122), reported yesterday favorably by Senate Agricultural Committee, and that same comes up for vote in Senate to-day. Will appreciate your support.

M. R. ABBOTT.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether the so-called agricultural allotment bill has been abandoned.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I can not give the Senator an answer to that. All I can say is that in a certain modified form it is on the calendar, and my opinion is——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is the Senator proposing this in the nature of a substitute that is more acceptable to the cotton planters than the other?

Mr. SMITH. I am proposing it to take care of the cotton situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the merits of it. I hope the Senator will not object to our having a vote, because I think this means more to the cotton industry than any other bill that could possibly be passed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am not objecting. I should like to know something about the status of the allotment bill, so far as the views of the Senator from South Carolina are concerned.

Mr. SMITH. Individually, Mr. President, I will never support the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is what I hoped were the views of the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk be authorized to change the numbers in the bill to conform with the amendments which have been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order is entered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move, on page 7, line 19, to strike out the words "the provisions of this and the eight immediately preceding sections," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "this act," so as to read:

SEC. 9. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to make all necessary rules and regulations and to employ such officers and employees as are necessary to execute this act.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, Mr. President; that is necessary in order to make the various sections conform to each other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I revert now to the subject we were discussing earlier in the afternoon. I think the Senator from South Carolina is in agreement, respecting the qualifications for membership on the cotton board, that certain language should be stricken out. Therefore I move, on page 4, line 18, that the following words be stricken out: "Residents of the cotton-producing States and all of whom shall be." With that stricken out the clause will then read, "all of which members shall be qualified and experienced in either the purchasing, handling, or production of cotton."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think that amendment ought to be agreed to. I doubt whether we have the right to restrict the President, anyway. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will agree to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment to the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, lines 18 and 19, the Senator from Michigan moves to strike out the words "residents of the cotton-producing States and all of whom shall be," so as to make the section read:

That there is hereby created in the Department of Agriculture a cotton board (hereinafter referred to as the board). Such board shall consist of six members to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, all of which members shall be qualified and experienced in either the purchasing, handling, or production of cotton. The members of the board shall receive no compensation for their services but shall be paid their actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties. They shall hold office during the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if it were possible to give relief to any person suffering in the United States, I should be glad to join in doing that. I hate human suffering. I am unhappy when I find human misery. But the bill before us seems to me like the rankest kind of class legislation. It seeks to benefit one section of this great country.

I do not find anything in the bill that would help the farmers in my State—the farmers who raise potatoes, onions, celery, fruit, who make maple sirup, who engage in many activities which, under the stress of present economic conditions, are decidedly at low ebb.

I am regretful for having any part in raising any sectional objection to the bill, but I have striven for a number of weeks to have the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry report a simple resolution authorizing the Red Cross to exchange cotton which it received under recent action of the Congress for garments made of wool. I pointed out in the committee that in the strenuous climate of northern New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Montana, and the Dakotas there are many citizens who can not be kept warm by garments made of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator suggested that before the committee. The program of the Red Cross is such that they are disposing of the cotton and using the money for the purpose of taking care of those who are in need of woolen clothes or any kind of clothes that are necessary for the comfort of the people under these distressing conditions. So far as I am concerned and so far as my influence in the committee is concerned, I shall be very glad, when the chairman of the committee calls the bill up, to vote for the measure. I will say, before I sit down, that really I think the Red Cross will do what the Senator seeks anyway, because they are selling the cotton. They are not converting the cotton into cotton goods, but are selling it and using the proceeds to do with as they please.

Mr. President, I have just received the following telegram:

ST. MATTHEWS, S. C., February 18, 1933.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
United States Senator:

Census made cotton growers, 850 counties, shows 100 per cent indorsement your bill and subscription excess of 5,000,000 bales carrying reduction cotton acreage proportionately. Passage your bill benefit every line cotton industry and entire Nation. You release this.

J. SKOTTOWE WANNAMAKER,
President American Cotton Association.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to what the Senator from South Carolina has said; but unfortunately the Red Cross, if I rightly understand its attitude and the letters from Judge Payne which I have received, is not permitted to exchange the cotton which has been turned over to it for anything except garments made of cotton. I offered an amendment to the original proposal and withdrew it because of appeals made to me not to interfere with the passage of a measure which was so important for the relief of human suffering; and, of course, I yielded to those appeals, as I always do to appeals made for the relief of human suffering, wherever it may be.

Then I presented an independent resolution, having been assured that the Red Cross could not make the exchange without authority of Congress, because in the act which was passed here it was stated—I can not give the language literally, but I remember very well the spirit of it—that the Red Cross might change the cotton for garments or blankets made of cotton. Cotton garments and cotton blankets do not mean much in climates where the temperature falls to 42 below zero. A similar resolution was presented and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I appeared in person to present my cause, and the resolution remains in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Why is it, Mr. President, that when there is human suffering in the North and in the West and in New England such an appeal falls on ears not willing to listen?

The bill before us to-day is a bill which will be sectional in its advantages and in its functions if it is enacted into law. It is not a national bill. It would not confer benefits upon the United States of America. It would confer benefits upon one crop, in one section of our country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is only because that crop happens to be raised in one part of the country. If cotton could be raised all over the country, the bill would apply to the whole country.

I have great sympathy with the Senator's arguments in reference to the use of wool, and I regret very much that a provision as to wool was not included in the Red Cross bill which was passed. I would be willing to cooperate with the Senator. It is now 5 minutes of 1 o'clock, and I hope he will not destroy the chance to pass this very excellent measure because of the committee not reporting out his bill in regard to wool. I will say that I would be very happy to join the Senator in any effort to have wool used in the way he suggests.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I say to my friend the distinguished Senator from New York that while the bill before us does deal with cotton, it undertakes to deal only with the problem of disposing of that cotton which is held by some agency of the Government, and to do it effectively it must be done prior to the extra session of the Congress, which we understand will be convened in April. In April or May it will be entirely too late for us to procure any cotton legislation which will be of any benefit. However, it will be time enough to procure general legislation dealing with other crops, and there are other farm bills which have been introduced. For that reason this particular matter is segregated from the general farm legislation, in an effort to get the advantage of whatever benefit the law may bring in this particular year. If it stood upon the same basis as other crops with reference to planting, which is the material fact we are trying to affect here, there would be no necessity for considering it separate and apart from other general farm legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what the Senator from Georgia says and what the Senator from Tennessee says mean a lot to me because of my affection for them. Nevertheless I insist that this is class legislation. It does not seek to benefit the great country at large.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. It occurred to me that cotton being the largest crop raised in this country, and it being admitted that the most necessary thing at this time is to raise commodity prices, if we can raise commodity prices by this method with this largest crop, there would be probably 20,000,000 people to-day who can not buy automobiles or other manufactured products who would buy them. The Senator's position seems too narrow a way to look at this price problem.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I make a statement to the Senator? I want to read the first paragraph of the Red Cross act to which the Senator has referred, and I venture to say that under it there is no reason in the world why this cotton could not be exchanged for woolen blankets or woolen clothes. It provides:

> That the Federal Farm Board is authorized and directed to take such action as may be necessary to make available, at any time prior to May 1, 1934, on application of the American National Red Cross, or any other organization designated by the Red Cross, the remainder (not in excess of 350,000 bales) of the cotton of the Cotton Stabilization Corporation, for use in providing cloth, wearing apparel, and bedding, comforters, and blankets for the needy and distressed people of the United States and Territories.

There is no limitation or inhibition against swapping the cotton for woolen blankets or woolen clothes of any kind, and I hope the Senator will see his way clear to letting us pass this bill. Cotton is the largest exportable crop there is in the United States. It means more to the Senator's State than it does to mine, I have no doubt, because there are more people dealing in cotton in the Senator's State than in the State of Tennessee. I hope the Senator will let the bill pass.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to show the Senator how mistaken he is. He read the preamble of the Red Cross act. He did not read section 2.

> In order to carry out the purposes of this act, such cotton may be manufactured into, exchanged for, or disposed of and the proceeds used for acquiring cloth or wearing apparel or other articles of clothing or bedding made of cotton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 5125) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly withhold the suggestion for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask unanimous consent. We have agreed on the bill entirely down to the point of its passage. May we not have unanimous consent now to vote on the bill before the quorum is called? I ask unanimous consent to that end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have not yet finished what I want to say about the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. COPELAND. If it is proposed to put it on its immediate passage, of course I must object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the unfinished business has been laid before the Senate. If the Senator from New York desires to proceed with his remarks on the bill I shall not insist upon the point of no quorum.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will wait just a moment I shall conclude.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it was because of the language in the bill to which I have just referred, providing for the use of the cotton or its exchange for articles made out of cotton, that I was induced to offer the resolution which I did. I can not see how it makes any difference to those who raise cotton whether that cotton is used in exchange for cotton garments or for woolen garments. But the bill says it must be in exchange for cotton garments, so I made the appeal and submitted my resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, where it reposes in the icebox of the committee while the people who are suffering in the North are deprived of woolen garments because of the failure of the committee to report out a measure which has to do with the relief of human suffering.

Mr. President, suffering in my State means just as much to me as suffering in any other State, and a little bit more. I can not understand why it is that we should have to divide our interests and our thoughts, and take one part of the country and give it this favor and to propose legislation like this for its benefit, while at the same time refusing similar aid and benefits to another section of the country. The father of this bill, now that it has been amended as it has, would not recognize his own baby. We have cut off its ears, its arms, and its feet. Nobody knows now what the bill means. It has been amended on the floor in the most informal way. It will not hurt us to have the bill printed with the amendments already agreed to and presented here for the further consideration of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the only trouble about that is that it is so near the end of the session that unless we get the bill over to the House it will be impossible to have it enacted into law. I ask unanimous consent that we may now vote upon the cotton bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not intend to interpose any objection to the immediate passage of the bill or to the request for unanimous-consent vote. I merely wish to say that I am as deeply interested as any Senator from the South or elsewhere in the relief of the cotton farmer. I am willing to vote for any measure for relief of the cotton farmer or any other farmer which I think will accomplish more of good than harm. I doubt if this bill will do so. I am afraid it will prove an illusion and a cheat to most of the farmers, perhaps not so grievously as the Farm Board, but perhaps not less. I shall not, however, obstruct its passage or object to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to voting upon the bill immediately? That will require the calling of a quorum.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not object to voting, but I shall vote against the bill. I share the views expressed by the Senator from Oklahoma. I think the bill is a very unsatisfactory measure. I think it is embarking upon a policy that is disadvantageous and dangerous.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that we continue consideration of the Smith cotton bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I could not agree to that, Mr. President, unless the Senator provides that there shall be an immediate vote without further debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I include that in my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COPELAND. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and to vote immediately upon the cotton bill without further debate.

Mr. COPELAND. I understand a quorum has to be called for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think not, under these circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair that a quorum will have to be called.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to get unanimous consent first.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume there must first be a quorum called.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's request for unanimous consent will be submitted after the presence of a quorum is ascertained. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Cutting | Keyes | Sheppard |
| Austin | Dale | King | Shipstead |
| Bailey | Davis | La Follette | Shortridge |
| Bankhead | Dickinson | Lewis | Smith |
| Barbour | Dill | Logan | Smoot |
| Barkley | Fess | McGill | Steiwer |
| Bingham | Fletcher | McKellar | Stephens |
| Black | Frazier | McNary | Swanson |
| Blaine | George | Metcalf | Thomas, Idaho |
| Borah | Glass | Moses | Thomas, Okla. |
| Bratton | Glenn | Neely | Townsend |
| Brookhart | Goldsborough | Norbeck | Trammell |
| Bulkley | Gore | Norris | Tydings |
| Bulow | Grammer | Nye | Vandenberg |
| Byrnes | Harrison | Oddie | Wagner |
| Capper | Hastings | Patterson | Walcott |
| Caraway | Hayden | Pittman | Walsh, Mass. |
| Clark | Hebert | Reynolds | Walsh, Mont. |
| Coolidge | Hull | Robinson, Ark. | Watson |
| Copeland | Johnson | Robinson, Ind. | White |
| Costigan | Kean | Russell | |
| Couzens | Kendrick | Schuyler | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to vote immediately on the bill (S. 5122) which has been under consideration, the cotton purchase act, without further debate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and to be read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

FEDERAL AID FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5125) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to the substitute amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, when we adjourned yesterday we had under consideration the amendment which I had offered to strike out certain language at the bottom of page 2. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and I have conferred and have agreed upon an amendment which he will offer as a substitute for my amendment. Therefore I desire to withdraw my amendment and I hope the amendment which he will now offer will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be reported for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 25, strike out the period, insert a comma, and the following:

except upon the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and all such expenditures shall be reported to the corporation as often as required by it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I believe the amendment will be acceptable because it permits the administrative cost to be borne by the fund as so many of the Senators seemed to think yesterday should be done in order to secure administration of the provision in their States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was detained yesterday from the floor while this bill was under consideration. I ask the Senator, Who is to administer the fund and who is to be responsible for the administration, including the cost of administration?

Mr. GEORGE. The governor of the State, as I understand, and such agencies as are in existence or may be created. I will say to the Senator further that the Wagner substitute, of course, has not yet been voted upon, though it has been offered and is now under consideration. One of the proposed amendments in the Wagner substitute is this:

No part of the amounts paid to the governor of a State of Territory under this section shall be used for payment of administrative expenses incurred in furnishing relief and work relief under this section.

A motion was made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to strike out that provision, and that was the subject of debate when the Senate adjourned yesterday afternoon.

The amendment which I now offer, and which the Senator from Kentucky accepts, is to leave this provision in the bill with the proviso and exception that no amounts shall be paid for administrative purposes, "except upon the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation," and all expenditures made from the fund for administrative purposes shall be reported to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as it may require.

Mr. KING. But primarily, as I understand the Senator, the States and such instrumentalities as they may select will be responsible for the cost of administration, except that, with the consent of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the expenses may ultimately come out of the fund?

Mr. GEORGE. Or all of them, I may say, because it was stated by several Senators that some States were not able to administer this particular fund without drawing upon it. I am seeking to safeguard it as much as possible by making the expenditure of any part of the fund for administrative purposes subject to the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the accounts of those expenditures subject to their audit and control.

Mr. WAGNER and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. First I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. As I understand, the substitute provides for a direct contribution to the States?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator has the amendment confused, I think, with the proposal offered by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Wisconsin. My amendment does not change the method of distribution; it is still in the form of loans or advances to the States. The administration of the fund is not changed; it remains in the same control as the bill of last year provided, but we are making a further restriction upon the fund by providing that no part of the sum advanced may be used for administrative expenses by a State except with the consent—in effect, that is it—with the consent of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This amendment also, as I understand, provides that a report must be made of the expenditures for administrative purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is a little unfortunate that some of us are attending committees when important measures such as this are under consideration. I have not had an opportunity of knowing the terms of this bill. I am speaking now of the La Follette-Costigan bill, as well as the substitute. It does seem to me, however, that if the Government is to make these advances to the States in the shape of loans, then the States ought to assume the responsibility for the administration of the funds, and that the cost of administration ought not to come out of the funds advanced to the States but out of the States themselves; and they having the responsibility of administering it, knowing that they will have to meet the expense, will be far more economical and their administration will be far more effective than if they can put their hands into the fund for the purpose of administering it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is a provision in both bills which contemplates grants to the States for the relief of a certain class of persons called "transients" who need assistance, and that provision in both bills, as I understand, is in the nature of a grant or gift.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendment of the Senator from New York carries $15,000,000 for that purpose, and it is not contemplated that that part of the fund shall be reimbursed.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. KING. I am in sympathy with that provision.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That arrangement, I think, is a fair one.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I think everybody agrees to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I believe it is a necessary one, too, and I think it ought to be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I might say to the Senator that a survey which has just been made, and which was referred to in yesterday's newspapers, indicates that over a million and a quarter people are wandering through the United States, men, women, and children, absolutely homeless.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make no criticism of the suggestion that in the administration of the fund to care for what might be denominated transitory indigents the cost should come from the fund itself or from the Federal Government, but I was speaking of the larger fund which is contributed to the States. As it strikes me, the States themselves ought to administer the fund and ought to be responsible for it and pay the cost of administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in view of the observation made by the Senator from Arkansas a moment ago, I desire to read just a few lines into the RECORD, as follows:

> The survey conducted by the National Committee on Care for the Transient and Homeless made public yesterday shows that there are approximately 1,250,000 persons, including men, women, and children, now without homes and wandering up and down the country seeking relief.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I trust that nothing I said indicated that, in my opinion, there was no necessity for this provision. On the contrary, I think it is one of the most important and essential provisions in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I know the Senator's great interest in this subject, and I wanted to give him the latest figures upon that phase of the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, if in order, I should like at this time to ask for reconsideration of the vote whereby an amendment was adopted yesterday to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in order.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I make the suggestion with the concurrence of the author of the bill. Yesterday, following the word "canal," in section 3, language was inserted by the Senate which I will ask the clerk to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read as requested.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, in line 22, in the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, the words were inserted "reservoirs reasonably essential to the operation of such canals."

Mr. COSTIGAN. I should like, Mr. President, to substitute for the language in question the words "urban water systems, irrigation systems."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on reconsidering the vote whereby the amendment referred to to the amendment of the Senator from New York was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask who offered the amendment that the Senator has asked to have reconsidered?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I myself offered it, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With the consent of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who, I believe, has no objection to the language to be substituted——

Mr. WAGNER. No; I think it is clearer than the amendment adopted yesterday.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator to what particular provision of the substitute he is now directing attention?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The reference is not to the substitute before the Senate at this moment. It goes back to the amendment proposed yesterday to the bill S. 5125 and refers to section 3 of that amendment and not to the substitute which the Senator from Utah apparently has in his hand at this moment.

Mr. KING. I am sure that I do not understand the Senator. I understood the Senator was directing his attention to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], which begins:

> Title 1. Relief of destitution——

Mr. COSTIGAN. The motion does not relate to the substitute. It refers to the action taken yesterday with reference to Title I. On page 2, subdivision 3, line 22, following the word "canal," the language now attempted to be substituted would be inserted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. If the motion of the Senator from Colorado should prevail, then it would bring back for the consideration of the Senate all of section 22 of Title II of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I hope not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would open up the entire amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. KING. I have no objection. I understand the question is on the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to having been reconsidered, the Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be reported.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 22, in the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], in lieu of the language heretofore adopted it is proposed to insert the following: "urban water systems, irrigation systems."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there may be good reasons for broadening the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but they must, in my opinion, be imperative to justify an extension of the authority of that organization. Already, in view of the multiplicity of loans which it has made, loans for a multitude of purposes, there have been some criticisms upon the ground that its authority was too broad, and that if it exercised the full authority given to it it would impose upon the Government—and of course that means upon the people ultimately—an unnecessary burden.

My attention was not called until a moment ago to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] yesterday, under the head "Title I, relief of destitution; Title II, amendments to emergency relief and construction act of 1932."

Quoting from the proposed amendment, I find that the authority heretofore granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is considerably broadened. For instance, in line 7 I find that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized—

(1) To make loans to, or contracts with, States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public corporations, boards and commissions, and public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States, to aid in financing the construction, reconstruction, replacement, extension, or improvement of projects authorized under Federal, State, or municipal law which, in the opinion of the corporation, are needful and in the public interest; such loans or contracts to be made through the purchase of their securities—

I am told—and I shall be glad to be advised whether my information is accurate—that some of the provisions of the existing law have been so modified that these so-called public projects need not be self-liquidating.

If that is the case, Mr. President, I think we are embarking upon a sea of trouble, and expanding the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in a way that may result in dangerous consequences, certainly in serious drafts upon any funds conveyed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—and that means, of course, upon the Treasury of the United States.

I think there is some question as to the broadening of this authority so that anything that is needful may be the basis of justifying a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and justifying the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in granting the credit for such alleged needful improvements.

There is scarcely anything connected with political subdivisions that may not come within the category of needfulness, if I may use that expression. The paving of the streets in many municipalities may be denominated as needful. The putting in of new sewers, the extension of electric-light systems, the broadening of many of the activities of the municipalities, many of the people within the city might regard as needful. It does seem to me that in broadening the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation we are opening the door for rather dangerous invasions of the public credit.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Utah says he is afraid we are embarking on a policy that may lead to ruin or jeopardize or destroy the credit of the United States.

I should like to say to the Senator that we embarked on that policy long ago. It is the nature of this sort of policy to grow worse and worse and worse. It spreads like a plague spot. It can not be isolated. We are soaping the rails, not sanding them. There is no kind of brake that will stop a runaway car like this. It is like Hugo's runaway cannon that broke its moorings in a heavy sea.

I think we are deliberately destroying the credit of the United States, the only reservoir of credit that is now left. As I see it, credit is to a nation what honor is to a man, what chastity is to a woman. Without it, nothing counts. We are deliberately destroying the credit of the United States and, I think, precipitating a state of chaos which may compel us one day to look back upon these times, evil as they are, as "the good old days," as "the golden age."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the observations made by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma should challenge the attention of the Senate to some of the legislation which has been suggested, and some which undoubtedly will be brought to the bar of the Senate within the near future.

I have wondered what will be the effect if we continue these improvident expenditures by the Federal Government upon its credit. Obviously there can be only one result—the impairment of the credit of the United States. That credit to-day is like a great dam that holds back tumultuous floods that threaten devastation and ruin to the valleys below. If we imperil that dam, or if by our course we so weaken it as that it will ultimately be destroyed, it is manifest that our industrial and economic if not our political system will be destroyed.

I have marveled at the eagerness with which some powerful States have sought appropriations from the Federal Government. I was amazed when I learned that the great State of New York sought Federal credit and that the State of Pennsylvania came to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for credit—the two richest States in the Union; States which have profited by high-tariff legislation and by many discriminatory laws that have found a place upon the statute books of our country.

Mr. President, I think that when the States feel that they are to be compounded into one vast colloidal mass and that the Federal Government is to take over the duties and responsibilities and functions of the States not only is our form of government imperiled but we are not using extravagant language when we say that it is destroyed.

We have boasted that this was a Republic of republics; that we have sovereign States; and that under our form of government those States had responsibilities which they could not, if they observed the Constitution, devolve upon the Federal Government. But the States now seem to have forgotten their responsibilities; and municipalities and individuals, for that matter, feel that they can look to the Treasury of the United States, which is now empty, for relief. It is to be a cornucopia that will pour forth its golden treasures in order to relieve the situation, to furnish work and employment, and to sustain the activities of the States and municipalities and various political subdivisions.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to ask the Senator whether he knows that the State of Utah has borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt it has applied. Every State has done so.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure it was done only because the burden was so heavy that the State itself could not cope with the situation.

Mr. KING. That may or may not be. My State undoubtedly will pursue that course if we open the door and say, "Come; we will loan to you." Every State will take advantage of it; even the State from which the Senator comes, with its great wealth, and the fact that it contributes such a large part of the taxes of the country.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure that none of these States would apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan to cope with the situation of destitution except that the burden was too heavy for the State itself to carry under the present practice.

Mr. KING. I do not quite agree with the Senator from New York.

The State of New York, with its great wealth, certainly ought to be able to cope with the questions that come before it; and so of the State of Pennsylvania, and the State of Illinois, and other States. When they come to seek loans from the Federal Government, it does seem to me that they are just postponing a situation which as the days go by will become more aggravated, and in the end will impose upon them greater burdens, greater troubles and tribulations, than those through which they have passed and might pass if they did not seek relief at the hands of the Federal Government.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator is aware, I assume, that the country's "best minds" have been in control of the credit system, and they have approved of this kind of a program in the last three years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sure whether the Senator is seeking to entrap me into an admission that the best minds of the country have given us the wisest policies or, speaking ironically, that we have followed the "best minds" in fantastic propositions which they have submitted or approved.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They told us they were the best minds, did they not?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly. Like the Senator from Minnesota, if I properly interpret his views, I have some doubt as to the infallibility of these so-called "best minds."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I understand that the amendment we are now considering provides for a loan instead of a gratuity. A statement of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] last night during the debate has disturbed me very much.

Mr. KING. May I interrupt the Senator to say that I was not addressing myself to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN].

Mr. FESS. No; I assumed that the Senator was discussing the general proposition.

Mr. KING. The Senator is right.

Mr. FESS. The statement which the Senator from Georgia made yesterday, which so disconcerted me, was this:

> As long as this appropriation was in the nature of a loan, and a loan at least chargeable to the State, there was some restraint and restriction on the expenditure of the money. I have already said, however, that it has become now practically a bounty to the State.

Are we to understand that when this law becomes operative, although we are voting now in good faith a loan, it is to be regarded later as a bounty to the States?

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend that I hope not. I have understood that this was to be a loan. If it is a bounty, there would be greater objection to the measure than there is at present.

Mr. FESS. That is the statement of the Senator from Georgia which is very disconcerting to me.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. As a rule, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] do not sojourn with Alice in Wonderland; but I wonder if they imagine that there is any distinction, real or fancied, between a loan to a State and a bounty or a gratuity to a State?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio to reply.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me to make the statement, if we make a loan, I should not suppose that a State would accept it without the understanding that it is an obligation to be repaid and that it will be repaid.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, that is certainly an illusion for the Senator from Ohio to indulge. The pressure which constrained us in the first instance to make these loans will return here when pay day comes and insist, first, on postponement, then perhaps on reduction, and finally on cancellation.

The relationship of one sovereign to another as creditor to debtor is not only an undesirable relationship, it is an impossible relationship. We have had some experience with our debtors across the sea. We ought to learn a lesson from our experience.

I have a theory that wise men learn from the experience of others. The average man learns from his own experience. There is another class, however, that does not learn from experience, either from its own or from that of anyone else. I do not characterize this class in terms. I make no invidious comparisons. I will make this observation, however, before I sit down, that the day on which we began to make these loans by the Federal Government to States, counties, and cities was a more evil day in the history of this Republic than the day on which the Confederacy fired upon Fort Sumter.

That revolution did not succeed. That rebellion could not succeed. It was bound to fail. The Union was preserved in all its integrity; and the Republic, threatened as it was, survived the threats and survived the assaults involved in the secession of a dozen States. I doubt if this Union can survive policies as fundamentally evil and vicious as this, not, indeed, being initiated, but being expanded.

Is any Senator surprised? I took the time of the Senate a year ago to forecast that this measure would come before us in this session. Does anybody imagine that there is any period which can be set to a policy like this, if and when these States and municipalities once become attached to the body politic as leeches, as leeches, as leeches, sucking, not the blood of others, but sucking their own blood?

Imagine a hospital with 48 patients, in which a method of treatment was adopted of universal transfusion of blood from one patient to another, and one patient to another, until the circuit was completed. Let a man bite into his forearm and suck his own blood. Can he live on that diet and from that source indefinitely?

Who is supplying these resources? Who is paying these taxes? The State of New York, the State of Pennsylvania, and the State of Illinois, pay more than their share of our Federal taxes. They pay taxes out of proportion to their population. If the money which they borrow here should ever be repaid, they would repay more than their share. Yet hither they come flocking in hungry bands.

Mr. President, I do not know what the end will be, but I do know that when these States once attach themselves to the breast of this Republic and become nurslings, become sucklings at the breast of the General Government, they will never be sundered from that attachment, and when the day comes these States will return here and demand cancellation, and Senators will yield to that demand.

We had a little experience here the other day on the part of one of our officers. Neither this Republic nor the people of this Republic are in any danger from the corruption, or the alleged corruption, of Congress. Neither this Republic nor its people are in any serious danger from the incompetency of Congress. This Republic and its people are in jeopardy on account of the lack of courage. I use the word "courage" because I will not say that the danger arises from cowardice. I do not wish to be guilty of any impropriety toward my colleagues in this body. But there, sir, lies the danger.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Utah has expired on the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not know we were speaking under a limitation of debate. I shall take my time on the bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment pending is the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator from Minnesota desired to present a matter to the Senate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have an amendment to present, but I can not present it now.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from New York to what extent this measure which he has presented as a substitute would broaden the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. FESS. I notice that the Senator from New York is not in the Chamber at the present moment, and will not the Senator from Utah yield to me a moment, until he comes in?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator from Utah will agree with me that the utterances of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] sound like a voice from the great past, when, in other days, men stood upon the floor of this Chamber and in the other House demanding that the rights of the States be preserved and that nothing be done by the Federal Government in the way of an appropriation that might ultimately result in buying the independence of the States. His utterances are so unique in this day that I think there ought to be a word of appreciation, at least for his courage, which is quite unusual in these modern times.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the views expressed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are entitled to serious consideration by the Senate as well as by the country. In periods of depression the temptation is great to forget the paths of safety and the fundamental principles of government. History furnishes many examples where conservative and thoughtful people have in moments of stress abandoned principles upon which they have relied and which they have regarded as adequate to meet all contingencies. It seems to me that when storms arise there should be no abandonment of principles and doctrines which have guided the past but rather a determination to follow those policies which have contributed to the happiness and welfare of the people. This is no time, in my opinion, because our economic situation is unsatisfactory, for the American people to forsake the precepts and teachings of the fathers and the principles upon which this Republic is founded.

It is evident, however, that for a number of years past there has been an increasing disposition upon the part of the people to aggrandize the Federal Government and to look to it for the performance of duties and responsibilities which rest upon the States and their political subdivisions or upon individuals.

The struggle of the centuries was to decentralize authority; to obtain freedom for individuals and authority for local communities to control their own internal and domestic affairs. Many battles have been fought and many revolutions have occurred because of the efforts of brave and courageous men and women to seek freedom and to oppose powerful centralized authority or oppressive bureaucratic institutions. This Republic was organized as a protest against tyranny; against imperialistic policies; against autocratic authority; against restrictions and limitations upon individual conduct. The people insisted upon local self-government; they believed in their competency to govern themselves and to deal effectively and adequately with their internal and domestic problems.

There was a time when the people of this Republic paid reverence to their States; they were deeply attached to the States in which they lived. To preserve and protect the States was to them an obligation and a duty which could not be ignored; but within recent years there is a perceptible change to be noted in the attitude of the people toward their States and the political subdivisions therein. The eyes of the people have been turned to the Federal Government and as it has extended its authority, much of which has been usurpatory in character, there has been a diminished regard for the rights of the States and for local institutions. More and more the people have regarded the Federal Government as the source of authority, the fountain of power, the dispenser of favors and benefits. When attention has been challenged to this powerful movement which seeks the conference of additional power upon the Federal Government at the expense of the States and their political subdivisions it has aroused but little interest and has failed to revive the waning spirit back of local self-government.

Undoubtedly the part which the United States has played in world affairs has been in part responsible for the diminishing interest in local government and the growing indifference upon the part of the people to the fundamental principles upon which rests our dual form of government. There are some writers of distinction who contend that there is a world movement against democracy and the preservation or maintenance of strong local units of government; that the movement is in the direction of highly centralized governments with more or less unlimited power. An eminent writer has declared that the unitary form of government must ultimately prevail; that governments are not now tending to decentralization of authority but rather to centralization of authority. Attacks are made upon our dual form of government, and persistent efforts are made to strengthen the power of the Federal Government and to project its authority into the States.

The German people, following the World War, set up a republican form of government. It was believed that they no longer desired a powerful central government such as that which existed under Bismarck and the Kaiser, but recent events in Germany have been disturbing to the democratic forces there and elsewhere, and the movement toward dictatorship is undoubtedly increasing in strength. The Ebert constitution was liberal in form and promised opportunity for the development and maintenance of strong local units.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Just one observation at that point. I am afraid that this Republic has crossed the Rubicon.

Mr. KING. I do not go so far as the Senator from Oklahoma. Undoubtedly there have been departures from constitutional government and many of the policies which we have recently adopted have tended to devitalize the States and to impose unwarranted restrictions upon individual conduct and local self-government.

Mr. President, I rose a few moments ago only for the purpose of commenting upon the fact that under the measure before us, if I understand its terms, there is an attempt to enlarge the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There are many who question the wisdom of our Government in organizing that corporation. There are some who believe that our economic situation would have been better if this corporation had not been created. Doubtless there will always be controversy as to whether the purpose for which it was organized has been or will be accomplished or whether the good resulting from its operations will compensate for the possible harms which may result therefrom. Undoubtedly conditions which called this organization into being were serious, but there are many who believe that the situation to-day is more serious and critical than it was when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized. There is no occasion at this time to examine the record of this organization or to pass a final judgment upon its accomplishments. I do think, however, that we should proceed cautiously when propositions are submitted to broaden the scope of its activities and to give to it enlarged powers. I do not mean to say that present conditions do not justify augmenting the authority of this organization.

I should regret to learn that conditions are such as to imperatively require an extension of the power of this organization. The duty rests upon Congress to take no step that will impair the credit of the Government. In my opinion it would be unfortunate if there should be a general belief throughout the United States that this organization was an inexhaustible treasure to which resort might be had whenever credit was desired. I am afraid that too generally there is a feeling that the credit of the Federal Government may never be weakened, that it is a perennial fountain to which resort may be had for money and for credit to meet every contingency and every situation, individual, local, or national.

From information brought to my attention I have been somewhat alarmed to learn of the attitude of many people with respect to the question or matter of Federal credit. Cities, counties, States, private corporations, and individuals seem more and more to be relying upon the Federal Government to provide funds and credits to meet their needs. Many people believe that Congress should enact measures that will relieve them from their debts or provide them with ample funds with which they may discharge their obligations. Undoubtedly there is developing a feeling that local communities, cities, counties, and States should be relieved from obligations which, under our form of government, rest upon them and that the Federal Government should assume responsibilities which do not belong to it.

Mr. President, it may be that a situation to-day calls for an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance act in order that it may provide further loans to States and municipalities to provide for the needs of the unemployed and the destitute. With that provision of the pending measure I make no criticisms, but I am somewhat concerned when I learn that it is designed to greatly enlarge the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the result of which would be that the Federal Government would be required to furnish hundreds of millions of dollars additional in order to supply funds to meet the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for private and other purposes. If loans are to be made for purposes other than those provided in existing law it would be well to emphasize the wisdom of making them for the purpose of furnishing work to the unemployed. Jobs are needed more than anything else, aside from providing for the destitute.

Many States and municipalities are borrowing money to meet their expenditures. Corporations and individuals are overwhelmed with debt, and bankruptcies and insolvencies march through the land with devastating effects. This situation calls for prudence and wisdom and should compel most serious thought when proposals are made for further increased indebtedness of the Government. Unfortunately many people do not understand that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is dependent upon the Government, not only for its existence but for the credit which it extends. It is evident that many of the people believe that this corporation has unlimited funds, and that it should make loans for public and private purposes, with but indifferent regard as to the ability of the debtors to repay the Government.

Mr. President, I entertain a fear that the loans made to States and municipalities, if not repudiated, will arouse opposition when demands are made for payment. In my opinion it would be most unfortunate if the American people conceived it to be the duty of the Federal Government to maintain the States and their political subdivisions and to bestow upon them bounties and gifts and subsidies. If that view should prevail it would be disturbing evidence that there was a lack of fidelity to the States, and to the spirit of our democratic institutions. Indeed, it would justify the fear of the historian of a movement toward a form of government different from that conceived by the fathers of the Republic.

Mr. President, I think we should discourage the growing view that it is only necessary to knock at the doors of Congress or at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order that loans and credits may be obtained for any and all purposes.

We frequently hear the statement made that bonds should be issued by the National Government to the extent of billions of dollars for all sorts of purposes, and that the printing presses should turn out unlimited quantities of paper money. It is to be hoped that the American people will not follow false prophets or dangerous paths destructive of the credit of the Government.

Mr. President, perhaps many of the people do not know that the money which has been loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been procured from the Treasury of the United States; that the bonds or debentures issued by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in order to provide loans which have been made, were not sold to the public but were acquired by the Treasury of the United States. Of course, the Treasury did not have the funds with which the obligations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were met, and it was therefore compelled to issue additional Government bonds for sale to the public. With the growing demands upon the Treasury, and inadequate receipts from taxes, customs, and other revenue sources, the Government will be compelled to issue bonds to the extent of billions of dollars, in addition to the enormous bond issues required to meet deficits and growing expenses, and to provide funds for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other governmental agencies, and also to meet maturing obligations of the Government, amounting to many billions of dollars.

It must be evident to every thoughtful person that the strongest government may not indefinitely continue to issue its obligations without disastrous consequences. If the debentures of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were offered to the public, I have been asked upon a number of occasions what the result would be. I have responded that under present conditions I believe a market might be found for the same.

However, if its issues were offered for sale they would come into competition with securities issued by the Treasury. It has undoubtedly been considered wise to avoid such competition and, therefore, as I have stated, the Federal Government has purchased the bonds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If Congress broadens the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans, further additional funds must be obtained by the Federal Government in order that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may properly function. We should not authorize it to make loans for various purposes without making provisions to supply funds to meet the obligations of the corporation.

Mr. President, if the Federal Government shall continue to pile up deficits, it must be apparent, even to the most incorrigible, that the financial integrity of the Government will be weakened; its financial strength will be impaired. If this situation should arise the consequences to our economic and industrial system and, indeed, to our political system, would be serious beyond description. The credit of our Government, Mr. President, has been maintained; its credit must be maintained in future.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have addressed the Senate with regard to the pending measure for relief of the destitute on other occasions and I shall not take much time at present. I believe my views are well understood. I approved of relief being undertaken first by States, counties, and local charity boards, but those instrumentalities have exhausted their resources so we are relegated now to the only institution in the United States that has any credit, and that is the National Government. We have only one alternative and that is either to deny relief that is imperative or grant that relief through the National Government which still has credit.

I am inclined to believe, in addition to the relief of destitution, that we should also go to the limit in furnishing employment for the unemployed of the country. We have exactly the same alternative there apparently that exists in the relief of destitution, that either they must be employed by the Federal Government or not employed at all. We can not expect manufacturing industries to employ men when they have no purchasers for their manufactured articles. They will never have any purchasers for their manufactured articles as long as there are 12,000,000 people in the country unemployed and 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 people dependent on the farmers who can not earn sufficient to pay cost of production.

The matter is hardly subject to argument. Of course, I understand that we have a fetish called the balancing of the Budget. I do not think there is any business man but what thinks it is a good idea to balance the Budget, not only the Budget of our Government but the budget of one's own private affairs. It happens that at the present time no one can balance the budget of his private affairs and apparently we can not balance the Budget of the Government. Taxes are paid with money, but the assessment of taxes is made on property. Property values are constantly decreasing. Consequently no estimates and no promises in regard to balancing the Budget have any true foundation whatsoever.

Again we have not time to coordinate the expenditures of the Government and the Budget system. The $500,000,000 we are asked to appropriate to meet destitution and unemployment is charged against the current expenses of the Government. That is an item which has not been taken into consideration in any estimate of balancing the Budget. There will be other expenditures essential to meet unemployment that will be charged against the current expenses of the Government. They are not taken into consideration in balancing the Budget at all. It is obvious that until we segregate those things that are naturally current expenses, such as the employment of officers, from those things that are in the nature of capital investments or emergency investments, we can never balance the Budget.

We know now that at the special session of Congress there are going to be large business institutions of the country coming before the Congress and asking the Congress to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan those institutions hundreds of millions of dollars out of the Treasury of the United States. Those loans will be charged against current expenses unless some plan is devised to treat them as an emergency matter or as a capital investment. The whole thought of balancing the Budget at this time is weak in that it does not take into consideration expenditures that we know must be made and will be made.

When we speak with regard to the unsoundness of authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to go farther into the banking business, all of us will admit it. We will admit it is perfectly unsound for the United States Government to lend to banks, insurance companies, trust companies, and railroad companies. It is contrary to our whole financial system and our economic system, and yet those great financial institutions have said it was necessary, and it was necessary. The result of the situation is that we have established in a sense a new banking system under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The question is, shall we enlarge it? I know the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is opposed to enlarging it. All of us were opposed to its very existence. We are opposed to the very necessity that brought about its existence.

We are told there are $600,000,000 of surplus funds in the banks of the country over and above their legal reserve good for a credit of $9,000,000,000. We know that the Glass-Steagall bill passed by this body provided for possibly $4,000,000,000 additional credit to the banks through the Federal reserve act. But, as a matter of fact, the $4,000,000,000 was not utilized. The $4,000,000,000 did not become available credit for those institutions of the country that are crying for credit. We know that, although the power exists in the banks to extend the credit of the country by $9,000,000,000, it has not been extended and is not being extended and can not be extended under existing conditions.

It is said, "Have confidence, and we will be all right." To whom are we talking about having confidence? Are we talking to the man who is being foreclosed or to the bank itself? How can a man have confidence as he sees everything he possesses being taken away from him? The only way to reestablish his confidence is to save his property, at least temporarily. The banks say they can not save it. It is perfectly evident, whether we admit having gone so far astray from our banking system as we have, that the establishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was absolutely essential. It has done good work. In my opinion, it has failed only wherein we have limited its power.

It would seem to me that the time may come when it might be necessary to have another Glass-Steagall bill which would authorize the utilization of the $4,000,000,000 of credit of the reserve-bank system more directly to those who need it, possibly through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, than the futile effort of attempting to put it out at this time through the banks. It may be necessary even for our Government to take over the functions of certain banking institutions with regard to this surplus which they can not use at the present time. I am not blaming the banking institutions. With constantly falling market prices for land and commodities, no loan is safe. As the commodity prices and land values fall, then liquidation becomes more intense; and as liquidation becomes more intense, in turn it further depresses the value of property and the value of commodities.

It may seem radical, but whenever we start in to employ 2,000,000 men under a process, if that process is sufficiently sound under any form of government, I would see whether it could not be made equally sound by the employment of 6,000,000 men. That is another problem that will arise. I have expressed myself too often and too strongly in favor of this character of legislation to require any further argument on the matter. This is a temporary relief measure made necessary by abnormal conditions in our country. I do not believe there can be prosperity returned to the United States—no, I may say to the world—until there is a better balance made between property values and the comparative values of what we call money. I realize that whenever we speak of that we are then impinging upon the idea of inflation—too much inflation. I still contend that there must be a distinction in the definition of the words "inflation" and "reflation." It is inconceivable to me that we can not understand that there has been a deflation of our money in this country. It is admitted that the circulation of money has decreased enormously in the last two and one-half years. I do not mean the amount of currency.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WALCOTT. May I add just one figure on that point to clinch the Senator's argument? I looked the matter up with the Treasury Department only recently. The turnover of currency in the United States was only one-sixth in 1932 of the volume of the turnover of currency three years ago, in 1929.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator for the statistics. Of course, the turnover is the main question involved. If $1 turns over six times in a day and pays six debts, it is just as valuable as $6 would be if they turned over only once a day. The whole history of the situation shows the deflation. There is a deflation. Our Secretary of the Treasury recently stated his opposition to inflation. What he has in mind about inflation may be an entirely different thing from what I have in mind about reflation, but he said, of course, inflation would raise commodity prices and temporarily be beneficial, but in the long run the reaction would be worse.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Is not that generally true? Consider the world price to-day. With 56 countries in a state of depression, 26 are off the gold standard, and yet the world price which at first went up is now below what it was. That is inevitable.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is inevitable. There is no doubt about it. But the fact remains that when we speak of there not being any such thing as a quantitative theory of money, every time we need it we deny it ourselves. When the Secretary of the Treasury says inflation of currency and credit in this country would raise commodity prices, he admits the quantitative theory of money. We have to buy money with products just as money buys products, and the whole law of supply and demand works. There is no doubt about that whatever. When we speak of a depreciated currency, I think we thoroughly realize the disastrous effect the depreciated currencies of the world are having particularly on our domestic markets as well as export markets. They deal with depreciated currencies among themselves, so the cost of living does not go up much, the cost of production does not go up much, but when they come to sell to us and receive their pay in gold and take it back to their own country, they buy as much more of their own depreciated money with that gold as their currency has depreciated, while the unit cost in their own country has hardly risen at all. That applies everywhere.

The strange thing to me is that we can now understand that fact with regard to the depreciated currencies of governments who were formerly on the gold standard and who have gone off of it, and we can not see that we have been suffering since 1928 in exactly the same manner from the depreciated currencies of silver-money-using countries who used to be our best customers. They are identical. The only difference is that the remedies are different. The depreciated currencies of silver-using countries have nothing on earth to do with the causes that put the former gold-standard countries off the gold standard. There is no relation to speak of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a very splendid article by Prof. Irving Fisher on the question of inflation, reflation, and currency depreciation. While I do not agree with him in every way, I think it is a valuable article touching the matter under discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

BUDGET CURRENCY EXPANSION AND ECONOMIC DINNER

Speaking at the banquet at the Waldorf Astoria, February 6, 1933, attended by brokers from the various New York exchanges, business men and representatives from financial institutions, Dr. Irving Fisher, professor of political economy at Yale University, said in part as follows:

"Bankers are being quoted as opposing inflation. But only the other day Reginald McKenna, president—or as they say in England, chairman—of the Midland Bank, the largest bank in the world, and former Chancellor of the British Exchequer, said at the annual meeting of his bank: 'I confess the thought of inflation, so long as it is controlled, does not alarm me. In these days the word no longer is a term of reproach, though some tender consciences find ease in using the innocent substitute, reflation.'

"So here is a conundrum: When is inflation not inflation? Answer: When it is reflation!

"Reflation may be defined as that moderate degree of inflation which is justified to offset recent rapid and great deflation.

"Uncontrolled or immoderate inflation would, after a while, become as harmful as deflation.

"Ever since stumping against Bryan in 1896, I have been writing against such inflation and am against it now. Three of my books have been very largely devoted to fighting inflation as well as deflation. Practically every other economist is opposed to inflation and deflation.

"To-day there is a blind fear of inflation because people picture it as uncontrolled and wild like the German inflation after the war, which bears no analogy to the present. For one thing, it came on top of a previous war inflation and so was unjustified from the start.

"But reflation really is not inflation. The distinction between the two is important. We should aim, like a good chauffeur, to keep in the middle of the road, veering neither to the inflation side of the road nor to the deflation side. But once we find ourselves, as at present in the deflation ditch, our first task must be to get back in the middle of the road. That is, reflation is, in my opinion, not only a need but a necessity if we are to recover from this depression soon and without great further bankruptcies and unemployment.

"And if we do reflate and raise the price level, say, half as far as it has fallen in the last three years, I believe we could snap out of the depression in a few weeks. By this I merely mean that the average man would feel that the depression was over. For reflation can not bring the suicides to life nor restore the farms of the dispossessed nor compensate the 50 million unemployed of this world for the losses and griefs of the last few years.

"This depression will leave its impress on the world for generations.

"We must also admit that reflation may hurt a few people, namely the few new creditors of the last year or two. This is the price we must pay to relieve the far more numerous debtors of the antecedent years. Moreover, everybody, even the creditor, will be helped by restoring prosperity through a moderate reflation. I believe that reflation all the way back to the level of 1926 from which we have fallen 45 per cent would do more harm to creditors than it would do good to debtors. That would now be inflation. There is a golden mean, about half-way back, which is reflation.

"On both sides of the Atlantic, far-sighted bankers, like Mr. McKenna, realize that reflation will help bankers most of all because it will help business and unfreeze loans. Anyone who opposes such a halfway reflation is either blinded by self-interest as a short-term creditor—or rather, in most cases, by a fancied self-interest—or does not know the facts in the case. The supposed opposition to reflation is mostly a misconception. Most who say they oppose it really want a rise in the price level but do not realize that a rise in the price level can only come about by reflation.

"Some, like Secretary Mills, say that they want a rise in the price level but only through what he calls 'controlled credit expansion,' not through currency expansion; or they want it through a restoration of confidence which will stop hoarding and increase the velocity of circulation of all currency, including bank deposits.

"I myself believe that the two great means of reflating the price level are credit expansion and increased velocity. We should avoid wild currency expansion, which might weaken confidence and really destroy the credit currency which we circulate by checks, and so defeat itself. I am not at all in sympathy with such plans now before Congress, but I am in favor of a common-sense mitigation of our deflation plague by using credit expansion and improving velocity.

"Before going further on these means of reflation, I would like to say a word about the deflation since 1929. We can better remedy the disease if, first, we diagnose it. This diagnosis, at least the diagnosis which I have made in my book recently published, on Booms and Depressions, is, I believe, practically identical with the diagnosis of Sir Arthur Salter in his book on Recovery, and with that of Robert Eisler in his book on Stable Money, as well as with that of almost every other intensive student. This diagnosis is that there was and still is a complication of several but chiefly two diseases. We started with the debt disease and then caught the dollar disease.

"The overgrown debts caused an overgrown dollar, and this overgrown dollar—in other words, a lowered price level—is what is now mainly the matter.

"The debts in 1929, according to Merz in last Sunday's Times, amounted to $155,000,000,000 as compared to $115,000,000,000 in 1922, showing an increase of 35 per cent in seven years. As a matter of fact, Merz leaves out of account urban mortgages, brokers' loans and other bank loans, foreign loans and several other categories, which bring the total up to $254,000,000,000. The fact that some of these debts are based on others as assets does not diminish but increases the size and dangers of the overgrown debt structure. Real-estate mortgages are held by banks and are the basis for bank loans. If the mortgage goes bad, the bank loan crashes with it.

"If A owes a million dollars to B and B owes a million to C, and so on, the same sum being owed to D, then to E, F, and so on down to the last man Z, who owes his million to A, thus constituting a perfect circle of 26 persons, standing, so to speak, in a circle, each owing and being owed one million to and by his nearest neighbors in the circle, but knowing nothing of the financial affairs of the others, the net debt is not $26,000,000, nor even $1,000,000. It is zero. Yet, it is the gross debts, not the net debt which counts. If A can't pay his million to B, he may have to go into bankruptcy, which may put B into bankruptcy, and then C, D, and all along the line to the last man, like a row of blocks each toppling over the next in a circle. All this despite the theoretical mutual cancellability of all 26.

"This was what happened beginning with the stock-market crash in 1929. The brokers' loans collapsed first. In the stampede to sell in order to pay debts stocks crashed and this started the long train of events which is still going, including the fall of commodity prices.

"The selling at first is normal selling, that is, selling induced by the high prices. But as this cuts prices, the selling soon turns into distress selling, that is, selling compelled by low prices, i. e., forced selling, selling to preserve one's solvency. This sets up a vicious circle. The more stocks and commodities are sold because of sinking prices, the more prices sink and compel further selling.

"This selling is for the purpose of liquidating debts. But the liquidation of bank loans reduces bank deposits, the great circulating medium of America. As deposits contract so that there is less and less of checking accounts and less and less of checks exchanged, this contraction contracts the price level still more.

"This fall of prices is deflation. It is the dollar disease. For, if prices are cut in two, the dollar is doubled in value. This hypertrophied dollar doubles outstanding debts. So even if some debts are paid the remaining debts are doubled in burden.

"In a depression distress selling and contraction of deposits may expend each dollar of debt still owed faster than the number of dollars of debt is decreased. The very effort to decrease the burden of debt increases it. The more the people pay on their debts, the more they owe in terms of wheat and corn and cotton and iron and other real things.

"This is what has actually happened. When my 'Booms and Depressions' was being written a short time ago, the $234,000,000,000 of debts of 1929 had been reduced to $197,000,000,000 in 1932, an apparent reduction of 16 per cent. But this $197,000,000,000 in 1932 dollars was the equivalent in terms of commodities of $302,000,000,000 of 1929 dollars. Thus, in spite of the partial payments, in fact because of them, the $234,000,000,000 had, in terms of 1929 dollars, grown to $320,000,000,000 by June, 1932, an increase of 36 per cent.

"Since these calculations were made the dollar has appreciated still further. In June last the dollar was 1.6 in terms of 1929 dollars. To-day's dollar is $1.80 in terms of the 1929 dollar; that is, the wholesale price level is 55 per cent of what it was in 1929.

"It is said we can not get out of depressions except by liquidation. But the liquidation must be real. We have had liquidation which does not liquidate. As we have let the apparent liquidation magnify the dollar, we find ourselves more hopelessly in debt than we were to start with! This increase in the dollar and so in real debts is the source of almost all our troubles.

"As the price level falls, the business man's balance sheet becomes thrown out of balance through no fault of his. His assets shrink in terms of dollars, while his liabilities do not. So his net worth, or excess of assets over liabilities, often vanishes and he is bankrupt.

"This is what happens to his balance sheet or capital account. His income account is affected in the same way. With falling prices his receipts fall, while his expenses are largely fixed in terms of dollars. So his profit or excess of receipts over expenses often gets wiped out, and he finds he is running his business at a loss. He therefore stops running it and dismisses his laborers. Thus the falling prices, or swelling dollars, cause unemployment.

"That this is a great, powerful cause of unemployment is clear from the statistical charts before you, covering the period 1903–1932.

"Bankruptcies and unemployment are the two great tragedies of a depression, and both are symptoms of the dollar disease or falling price level. The swelling dollar causes bankruptcies by upsetting the capital accounts of business men and it causes unemployment by upsetting their income accounts.

"These two tragedies, the bankruptcies of the rich and the unemployment of the poor, cause pessimism and loss of confidence which, in turn, cause hoarding and slow down velocity of circulation of money and credit, which, in turn, reduce prices still more.

"In fact, the hoarding and sluggishness of circulation have depressed the price level at least twice as much as the contraction in the quantity of the circulating medium.

"Until recently, no very workable plan for combating this sluggishness has been employed. But now the stamp scrip plan has been found and has worked well. It is self-liquidating. It is not inflation. Used locally, as it is, it can not even appreciably affect the price level. Its main idea is, while money is not being used, to provide a substitute which will be used. It brings no strain on our gold reserve. It is actually working on a small scale and has caused no alarm, but only satisfaction.

"The best example and longest-tried stamp scrip is in Worgl, Austria, a small town, but the seat of a great and successful laboratory experiment, so to speak.

"Similar plans are being tried in the United States, the latest and largest city being St. Paul, which has voted to adopt it. Toledo, Des Moines, and San Antonio have it under consideration.

"One great advantage of dated stamp scrip is its rapidity of circulation. The holder of a dollar of scrip which requires a 2-cent stamp every Wednesday will always try to pass it on before the next Wednesday. The stamp acts as a tax on hoarding. In Worgl, Austria, where this sort of scrip has been used longest, the mayor calculates that it circulates twenty times as fast as money. A little goes a long way and the public will not need to be alarmed by so large an issue as would be needed if other sorts of circulating medium were used. The main object should be to reflate not pocket money but bank deposits.

"The stamp tax is a very peculiar sort of tax, for it pays its own way, so to speak. It creates the profit out of which it is paid. Any merchant is glad to allow a 2 per cent discount to get trade.

"I believe that stamp scrip if made nation-wide could prime the pump enough in a few weeks to bring our idle bank funds into play. The bond-buying campaign of the Federal reserve system last year pumped the banks full of credit, but little of this credit has as yet flowed from the banks to their customers because these customers, the merchants, will not borrow until they find buyers for their own wares. Stamp scrip starts the buying and so starts the use of bank credit.

"There are other sound ways of reflating. Mr. James H. Rand, jr., president of the Remington-Rand Co., is the author of several. Another is that suggested by M. C. Rorty, formerly vice president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. Another is that of Fred I. Kent, vice president of the Bankers Trust Co. Another is the bond buying last year used by the Federal reserve system which ought not to be abandoned or reversed as seemingly wished by the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank.

"It is important that any new circulating medium, whether credit or money, should be used to start up normal production and trade rather than diverted to unnecessary public works.

"In particular there should be loans, with little or no interest and preferably in stamp scrip, to producers who will use it for labor and materials and to holders of frozen deposits in failed banks.

"I think these measures would amply suffice and that it would be well to drop all others, at least all so far proposed, and concentrate on these. My fear as to the other measures proposed is not that they will turn into uncontrolled inflation in the end, but that in the beginning they may act in a deflationary way. It was partly on this ground that I opposed the Patman bonus bill. Anything which frightens the public will be apt to contract bank credit which we need to expand.

"The reflationary efforts of the Federal reserve system, approved by President Hoover and Secretary Mills, were not wholly in vain and now afford a good basis on which to build. All we now need to make that reflation effective is a little priming of the pump such as I have just suggested—stamp scrip and easy loans, preferably in stamp scrip, to depositors in failed banks and to producers for increased inventories and employment.

"But the most important experiment is that of Sweden, which is the first country to adopt a true commodity standard for money. Since she went off the gold standard in September, 1931, and adopted a managed currency through the credit control under the Riksbank, her price level has remained practically invariable week by week up to the present time. While some of our bankers have been telling us this thing can not be done, Sweden has been doing it. The chart shows the startling contrast between the instability of our price level and Sweden's.

"If Sweden can stabilize the purchasing power of her krona, why can not we stabilize the dollar?

"Sweden's success in this pioneer work is the high-water mark of sound economics and banking policy of all time. Such stabilization in the long run is even more important than reflation. For it means the practical abolition of depressions.

"Countries which have had some reflation, like England, Japan, and Brazil, have experienced improvement. In Brazil, according to a competent resident American observer, there is practically no unemployment.

"Reflation and stabilization are the two great economic needs of the day both in America and abroad. In this conclusion I am joined by numerous authorities including besides economists many bankers, besides Reginald McKenna, some of whom do not want to be quoted. I suggest that the time has come to speak out.

"The only sane alternative to reflation is debt scaling. Theoretically, this would solve the problem even better because each individual debt could be scaled according to when it was contracted; but, practically, this can not be worked out in detail. For one thing, the time when a debt began is not the same for the debtor as it is for the creditor if, for instance, the debt has been bought up since it was first contracted.

"A bonded debt is constantly changing hands. Take Uncle Sam's bonds of war time. They date back 15 years so far as Uncle Sam, the debtor, is concerned. But if they were to be paid in the cheap money of 1918, the present holders would be defrauded of half of the value they parted with.

"Nevertheless, despite its practical imperfections, I am glad to see the new debt scaling, or bankruptcy legislation, attempted by Congress, and hope something good may come out of it. But I fear the results can only be meager, so some reflation will be urgently needed in any event. Moreover, stabilization should certainly be our policy for the future.

"My conclusion is that by starting up the use again of bank credit through stamp scrip and otherwise we may get the necessary reflation. This will afford the farm relief so important to our most basic industry, agriculture. It will lessen bankruptcies and unemployment; it will give us control of our price level as Sweden has control of hers but as we have never had.

"The idea that there is something 'unnatural' in this control is the result of an illusion. There is no natural price level or natural dollar, any more than there is a natural yardstick. The only good yardstick of length is one that is constant in length, and a good dollar is one that is constant in value, which means that the price level must be constant. We must so manage and control as to keep the price level constant.

"The choice is not between a natural and an unnatural price level but between a price level left to accident and one controlled by design.

"If in Chart IV we should include the Chinese price level, its curve would be different from that of the United States or that of Sweden. Often the Chinese level was rising, as between 1926 and 1931, while ours was falling. The Chinese standard is just as 'natural' as ours, which means that both are accidental. China has a silver standard and we a gold standard. Both are left to the tender mercies of chance, of mining and unregulated banking; whereas, under the Swedish standard, the krona is a real standardized unit of purchasing power, just as our yardstick or kilowatt is standardized. Every unit is artificial. The yardstick in America is as artificial as the krona in Sweden. In fact, our dollar is already artificial—absurdly so. It is a unit of weight of gold instead of a unit of value. It is as absurd as if a yardstick were defined as the length of any stick which weighs a pound. We ought not to care what our dollar weighs, but only what it buys.

"It is the choice of the monetary unit which determines the price level. It is a question of a good choice or a bad choice. Our choice is a slip-shod one and so is China's.

"'Natural' supply and demand of goods fix individual prices relatively to each other but do not fix the price level. If they did, the price levels of China and the United States would not be so divergent.

"Anyone who wants uncontrolled inflation is as much an enemy of society as those who want no control over deflation. We must have control over both. We must get our great machine, now out of control, under control. We must get it back into the middle of the road and keep it there."

Mr. PITTMAN. I also ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a very excellent statement made by Mr. René Léon before the Finance Committee along somewhat the same lines, and while I do not agree in toto with it, I agree with so much of it, and it is such a valuable contribution to this study, that I ask that it may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MR. RENÉ LÉON BEFORE THE FINANCE COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE, FEBRUARY 15, 1933

A much greater volume of business has been transacted in America with a much smaller stock of gold than the present one, and with much less currency in circulation than is now outstanding. Hence, we have no shortage of currency.

Money-market rates for all maturities, quotations for short-term Government obligations, and large banking reserves all bear testimony to the fact that credit is superabundant. Hence, we have no shortage of credit.

Having neither currency nor credit problems, it follows that our dollar needs no alteration. But we have a problem which is basic and fundamental, one upon which our welfare depends and which requires immediate solution; it is the problem of prices.

Our well-being depends upon the level and stability of prices, without which our present system must collapse and give way to a new order, which may be better or which may be worse, but which certainly will be different. If reversion to prehistoric barter is an indication of progress, then we are justified in believing that it will be better. Many communities have already reverted to barter because their price system had broken down. If this condition spreads, government as we conceive it can not longer function. Government is purely administrative; upon price and volume of taxable units is predicated the income which it derives from taxation and which is indispensable to its very life. If we revert to barter, we shall have volume without price, so that government will be left without a basis for taxation, and therefore without income, unless it undertakes to levy taxes in commodities. Having no income, how could government function, let alone meet its obligations?

When mankind supplanted barter by the price system and adopted instruments of exchange, it took the longest step forward in the development of civilization. Of all price-measuring instruments of exchange ever used by man there are two which by common consent have outlasted all others. Either or both of them form the bases of all currency systems, of all credit systems, and, where redeemability still exists, they represent ultimate redeemability for all instruments of credit. Gold and silver are these two basic price-measuring instruments of exchange.

In the game of trade the world uses yellow and white chips to figure the prices which measure and regulate every human activity. In approaching the price problem we can not permit our judgment to be restricted by the notion that the chips which we use to figure prices constitute the true values; because if we do, we will merely continue to waste time "preserving the integrity of gold" or attempting to "do something for silver," the while prices crumble about our ears, carrying with them our whole price system.

To-day our prices suffer, from the dollar's position of inequality or disparity, in its relation with the currencies of over four-fifths of the world's population. This disparity between home and alien currencies also creates a disparity between home and alien prices which results in our inability successfully to compete in the world's markets with those whose currencies and prices are depreciated, thus causing our normal exports to back up onto our local market and depress our prices. It also results in the flooding of our market with goods produced in those countries where depreciated currencies are the bases of prices. This, in turn, forces the readjustment downward of our home prices, which carries us further from our debts and taxes which are payable in the dollar proceeds of our commodities, our labor, and our services.

By their surpluses of imports and exports all nations make their contribution to the international price level, to which they are thus tied and which, under natural conditions, should reflect a normal balance of goods and services between them all. No such condition now exists. To-day the natural forces are either impeded or unduly stimulated by a series of local measures designed either to protect local markets from external competition or artificially to stimulate exports at the expense of competing nations. Tariffs, quotas, exchange restrictions, etc., are merely different expressions of the same desire to achieve favorable balances at some one else's expense.

The more recent and, let it be recognized, the most effective artificiality devised to achieve favorable balances, is the deliberate depreciation of exchange. Its effectiveness is the more complete because it is the most insidious and deceptive instrument of price destruction hitherto conceived. The principle of low exchange as a stimulus to exports through the reduction of local costs of production would, if reduced ad absurdum, carry both exchanges and costs to the vanishing point. To establish this principle is to challenge competition in the same way, and this competition, by seeking still lower levels of exchanges and costs, would ultimately drive all concerned to the zero level. The gold standard countries are particularly vulnerable to this system because their obligations, which are fixed in gold, become the more onerous as prices fall.

This system must be broken up at all costs if we are to avoid a general collapse. It can be terminated by international action, failing which, local measures of protection must at once be adopted.

Some time prior to December 15 last the suggestion was put forth that the British Government pay its debt installment in pounds sterling. It was suggested that by converting these pounds into dollars as opportunity offered, the problem of transfer would be facilitated and the exchange market subjected to a minimum of disturbance. The British demurred on the ground that (1) substantial holdings of pounds sterling by the United States would constitute an interference with British control of exchange, and (2) that if Britain were to guarantee the dollar equivalent of these pounds sterling, payment in the latter fashion would be tantamount to a payment in actual gold. The British objections, which were eminently proper, were sustained and payment in gold effected.

If the American Secretary of the Treasury were to issue $500,000,000 in Treasury notes and, with the proceeds were he, an American official, to enter the exchange markets and buy pounds sterling, thus lifting the rate of exchange of British currency, Britain would have every right to resent our intrusion, because it interfered with British control of British currency and, through it, with their control of the British price level. Yet, without so much as a by-your-leave, Britain has placed at the disposal of the British Treasury a 150,000,000-pound secret "exchange equalization fund" (about $500,000,000) through which Britain, by purchasing gold currencies in the exchange market, dollars included, gives to England the control of dollar exchange and, consequently, the control of American prices.

Because of their noncommercial character, all exchange transactions for the account of the "equalization fund" are artificial in their influence upon the reciprocal relations of the pound sterling and the gold currencies, the dollar included, as well as upon the reciprocal relations of prices within the sterling area on the one hand and the prices of the gold standard nations on the other. They constitute an artificial interference by Britain with the economy of the gold-standard countries, America included, whose prices are thus controlled by Britain through exchange.

That which Britain would not for one minute countenance from America she practices every minute upon America with disastrous consequences to every phase of our economy. Every man, woman, and child in this country is the victim of this ruthless policy.

The control of dollar exchange and, through it, of American prices, depends entirely upon Britain's ability to complete these artificial noncommercial exchange operations whereby she realizes her objective. It is only by our leave that Britain is enabled to complete them. Because we maintain a free international gold market, and thus grant her free entry into and free exit from our money markets, we allow her, together with other aliens, to use the dollar as a lever for the intensification of this condition of disparity, or inequality, existing between the depreciated currencies and the gold-standard currencies and, consequently, between their prices and the prices of the gold-standard nations. We thus become a party to the crime and the coauthors of our own destruction.

It now remains for us to decide whether we shall continue to maintain a free international gold market for the benefit of alien exploiters, at the expense of our prices and at the sacrifice of our economy, or whether, by maintaining a free internal gold market for Americans, we shall raise American prices, save the American economic structure, and thus return control of American affairs to American hands.

It also remains for Great Britain to decide whether she will force us to adopt defensive measures or whether she will abandon her attempt at price control and join with us in a common effort to raise world prices and thus help to restore international trade. Before engaging with Britain in a bargain involving trade advantages and disarmament in return for a readjustment of debts we might both usefully bear in mind that the short road to prosperity and to disarmament is the lifting of the economic pressure created by low prices, because this very pressure, as expressed by punitive and retaliatory measures affecting trade, engenders the suspicion which grows to hatred and leads to armament and to war.

Let us now examine the factors underlying Britain's deflationary policy. Debt cancellation is avowedly Britain's immediate objective, because if America can be saddled with the debts American industry must foot the bill through future taxes, which thereafter will have to be figured in the American cost of production. With this cost of production thus presently raised, American industry would henceforth be permanently handicapped when competing with British industry in the world's markets.

If the debt-cancellation policy is to succeed, debts must be made to appear to Americans to be the one insurmountable obstacle in the way of their prosperity. By way of superinducing this feeling among Americans, British policy is intensifying the American depression by driving down gold (dollar) prices. Gold and silver being the only two international instruments of exchange, Britain uses them as her implements of price destruction through the "exchange equalization fund" in the West and the Indian silver-dumping policy in the East.

The "exchange equalization fund" was ostensibly created for the purpose of "adjusting" the pound sterling to the British price level. British economy was in need of such adjustment; but the very proportions of the "equalization fund" are conclusive evidence of a desire not alone to achieve equilibrium between the British currency and the British price level but to control world prices as well, and to wield that control for political ends. However acute may have been the pressure of self-preservation, it never did and never could justify Britain's attempt to control world prices. Moreover, Britain's Indian silver-dumping policy is absolutely indefensible on any ground.

The deliberate depreciation of one of the two principal money metals by shifting upon the other the whole burden of world finance has merely succeeded in rarifying it and has initiated the mad rush for gold which is still raging and which is disrupting the economic structure of the entire world. Times without number Britain was warned of the consequences of such action. No less eminent figures than the governors of the two principal central banking institutions of the empire have issued the warnings. Both Mr. Montagu Norman, of the Bank of England, and Sir Osborne Smith, of the Imperial Bank of India, are on record.

Added to these are innumeral Britons of distinction who constantly are calling their Government's attention to the frightful conditions which it has brought about and which it persists in perpetuating. Yet not a word is spoken by the responsible government officials in justification of their action. Those who profit by low silver, because they control the China trade, seem firmly intrenched in the British treasury and in the India office. There are also British officials who believe that low silver makes for better control of Indian affairs. Be they interested slave drivers or misguided politicians, the result is the same. By their action white men the world over, Britons and Americans alike, are being subjected to the ruinous competition of the coolie. By injecting into our price system the powerful factor of price destruction, which low silver constitutes, they are wrecking the world's industrial machinery, and of the once imaginary yellow peril they are making a reality.

Enlightened America, viewing the plight of a world torn asunder by retaliation, and realizing that retaliation is a losing game for all concerned, should be the last to retaliate. But our very existence demands an immediate correction of these conditions, failing which we must lose no time in adopting measures of self-protection.

The instruments of self-defense are in our hands. Were the Executive, in whom power is vested, to exercise his prerogative, one-half the program of defense would be effectually established within 24 hours. A prohibitive fee on the export of gold would achieve this result. The President's authority to act is vested in him under section 5, subdivision B, title 50, United States Code, Annotated, pages 204–205.

Let us now analyze the consequences of such action on our economy; the founders of this country did not create the dollar as an international currency but as the currency of the people of the United States. The duty of government is to maintain its redeemability, in accordance with the law of the land, for the benefit of American citizens. The application of a license fee on shipments of gold for export would in no wise threaten the redeemability of the dollar. On the contrary, it would insure it by removing certain destructive foreign elements which, because they undermine our economy, threaten our currency system. Under the new condition any citizen could redeem his notes in gold on demand.

Deprived of free exit from our market, gold would no longer take free entry into it, thus effectively stopping its concentration, sterilization, and consequent appreciation. Aliens could no longer buy a free "call" on gold by buying dollars in the exchange market. This is another way of saying that they could no longer freely sell and depreciate their currencies by the purchase of dollars through exchange and by the operation also widen the disparity existing between their prices and our own. As a result, the value of gold at once would fall when measured in terms of all commodities and depreciated foreign exchanges which once again is another way of stating that all the commodities and depreciated foreign exchanges would rise in terms of the dollar. This rise in the foreign exchanges would be the measure of the rise of all external costs of production in their relation with our own, thus eliminating external dumping from our home markets without recourse to increased tariffs. Our prices would rise at home and fall abroad, thus facilitating both our home and export markets. The rate of dollar exchange in the foreign markets would henceforth alone be fixed by the supply of and demand for dollars resulting from commercial transactions. The utilization of the dollar by aliens as a lever on their prices and on our own would be terminated once and for all. The few remaining gold-standard countries would be likely to follow suit, thus paving the way for the establishment of a sound international money system. This is now being retarded because certain nations find it profitable at the moment to remain off the gold standard which they exploit for selfish ends in utter disregard of the devastating effect of their actions upon the price structure of the gold-standard nations. Our own country is especially affected because the credit system is more fully developed in America than in other gold-standard countries; hence the undermining of our price level threatens a greater structure.

Once freed from external pressure on our prices, our commodity and security markets would definitely reverse their downward trend and, by gaining in price and volume, would furnish to Government that basis for taxation which is indispensable to its function. Credit expansion as an aid to prices has been tried and has failed because the instrumentality was local in its nature; adverse international factors were unaffected thereby and therefore remained uncorrected.

Some may object to this procedure on the ground that we would lose prestige as a free gold market; but what is prestige? Webster defines it as "a weight or influence derived from past success." Let us therefore review the past and squarely face our achievements. For the sake of maintaining a free gold market for aliens we have sacrificed our price level, and thus upset the normal basis of economic relations between our creditor and debtor classes. Our debts and taxes having become unbearable, we are now facing all manner of unsound legislation designed to relieve us of the intolerable burden which is breaking our backs. If this be the price of such prestige as we derive from the maintenance of a free gold market for aliens, then together with the Romans we can well explain "Venenum in auro bibitur," because we are indeed drinking poison from a golden vessel.

The second half of the program consists in further correcting the disparity of the dollar in its relation with the important silver exchanges. The influence of silver-using countries on world economy has been consistently underestimated by pointing to their relatively small contribution to the total of world trade. No greater blunder could be made. If artificial stimulus through low exchange is given to oriental exports, then the coolie will drag the white man down to his level. He is doing it now, as evidenced by the statistics of foreign trade, which show that the dollar volume of Chinese trade has shrunk less than that of any one of the leading nations. Were this trade to be translated in terms of its physical volume, it would be found that it had grown enormously, while our own unemployment has grown apace. China has been forced into an export position by the artificial depreciation of the (silver) Chinese exchanges. Had the purchasing power of the Chinese remained unimpaired, their indispensable import needs would not have forced them into this export position at the expense of western labor. Hence the imperative necessity of doing something through silver for American agriculture, American industry, and American labor, instead of merely "doing something for silver."

Authority should be given the Treasury to purchase $200,000,000 in silver at a cost not to exceed 50 cents per ounce, purchases to be made in the world's markets, and not restricted to American production. The financing of this operation could be effected by expanding by an equal dollar amount our issue of silver certificates now outstanding in the sum of approximately $500,000,000, or by utilizing part of the gold now held as reserve for gold certificates and United States notes combined, now outstanding in the sum of approximately $1,500,000,000. The gold thus thrown upon the world's markets could not fail to affect its value when measured in terms of all other commodities. Our gold certificates and United States notes would be left with a gold coverage of approximately 85 per cent, which should be considered as adequate. On completion of this operation we would have less silver in this country, in proportion to gold stocks than we had in 1914. As a powerful influence on world prices and on American trade this measure would have incalculable consequences. The last important available stock of silver, now held in the Indian treasury, and said to approximate 200,000,000 ounces, would be removed from the world's markets. Faced by this vast sale of gold and by a reduced production of silver, the precious metals would regain a measure of equilibrium. Meanwhile the fall in the Chinese internal price level, caused by the rise of the China exchange, would cause little disturbance, owing to the limited size of the Chinese credit structure, while further compensation would be found in the restoration of the purchasing power of the Chinese currency. Dumping on our market from that quarter would be terminated.

While unemployment and misery stalk this land of plenty, many measures of relief are being offered. While well inspired they are usually inadequate because their sponsors fail to grasp the true nature of our basic problem. How can we ask bankrupt industry to rescue bankrupt agriculture? How can the bankrupt white-collar class be asked to support those in uniform who are also bankrupt, all because of low prices? No; class legislation will never do. We must find a remedy which will bring relief to all classes; one which will lift the burden from the backs of all our people. Low prices are diffusing poverty among us all. The distribution of wealth can only come through the raising of prices, which, by first creating wealth, will lead to its distribution among all classes.

While no country can pretend to a monopoly of the control of prices, it is equally true that no nation alone can succeed in raising world prices. However, an Anglo-American understanding will constitute a force of such numerical proportions as will insure the realization of our objective. Therefore the part of wisdom is for the United States to assume an attitude of enlightened selfishness by adopting a policy of give and take toward our friends across the sea. Provided Britain will work with us to raise prices and to restore international trade, we should work with her to enable her to put the pound back to its former time-honored gold parity and assure stable monetary conditions for England which can only come about if the burden of her debts to our Treasury is not such as to constitute a constant menace to her currency.

If we are resolute in pursuing this aim, those enlightened and influential Britons to whom I have already referred will do their part, so that certain success will crown our joint effort.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has sounded a note so different from the usual note which is sounded in discussing inflation and reflation that I wish to take this opportunity to say that I have great appreciation for the manner in which he has discussed this very sensitive subject. I had intended to devote some time to the discussion of this question, but we are under a limitation of debate, and I can not do it under that limitation. However, I do wish to do it as soon as possible, and I should like to have the Senator from Nevada present when I discuss the question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Ohio for his suggestion, and to say that I shall be present on that occasion, because I always enjoy hearing the Senator discuss any scientific, commercial, or economic question.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. And I desire once more to say I think that the most important matters that our Government has before it to-day are the questions that we have been discussing—the question of proper reflation, the proper availability of credit, and some form of adjustment of or protection against the depreciated currencies of all the world.

WHAT IS MONEY?—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WHEELER

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on the evening of Tuesday last, my colleague [Mr. WHEELER] delivered over the radio an interesting address on the subjects related to those treated of in the two addresses just now ordered to be printed in the RECORD. I ask that this speech may likewise be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience: In times like these, when millions of men are walking our streets wanting employment and unable to find it, when futile attempts are being made to foreclose farm mortgages by the wholesale because farmers in the richest farm sections of the country are unable to pay principal or interest, when factories are closed because they are unable to sell their products and people in many communities are using various substitutes for the thing we call money, it is proper that we should ask ourselves the question: What is money?

Regarding the invention of money, absolutely nothing is known. The earliest recorded mention of money is found in the Bible. In Genesis, "Abraham returned from Egypt very rich in cattle, silver, and in gold." The invention of money was so remote that there can not be even conjecture by whom devised, or where, or when. Even the invention of coinage is obscure. By some of the highest authorities, it is claimed that the Lydians, an Asiatic people about 1200 B. C. were the inventors.

Almost every commodity has been selected as the exchange medium. Some articles such as paper and wampum were made valuable solely by the fiat of government, while others as silver, gold, platinum, copper, possessed more or less commodity worth. Before governments were instituted, the mediums of exchange, money, were evidently articles having great utility, or otherwise they could not have so acted. But since the earliest history of finance, money has been the creature of law. Our forefathers wrote into the Constitution of the United States this provision, "Congress shall have the right to coin money and regulate the value thereof." Congress, however, has not seen fit, during recent times, to exercise this duty but has turned this most important function of government over to the great banking interests of this country and they can not shirk responsibility for the economic chaos in which we find ourselves to-night.

Up until 1873 gold and silver together were the world's money metals. In other words, anyone mining either metal could take that metal to a mint where it would be coined for him without charge. At times both gold and silver mines of the world were very productive, and this, of course, brought about a money inflation. Such periods were known as good times, with rising prices; manufacturers were prosperous, laboring men could find employment at good wages, and farmers were able to get good prices for their commodities. Then there would be other periods when either or both of the mines became less productive. This caused a money deflation. Prices then began to fall, and hard times ensued. But when both gold and silver mines of the world were seemingly exhausted money became scarcer and scarcer, and times became harder and harder. Sometimes these money famines continued for hundreds of years until new discoveries of silver and gold were made, and were known as the Dark Ages. One can trace the cause of economic progress or retrogression of any period of the world's history to the amount of gold and silver produced at the time. The relationship between man and money is so close that the history of one is the history of both.

There are at least three kinds of money; there is primary money which at the present time is gold, and gold is the yardstick of national and international trade. There was not enough gold, so paper money, based upon gold, was created. That currency is represented to-day by dollar bills and silver coins in your purse. Then there is the kind of money called credit money, represented by checks and paper written by banks. It is only through the use of currency and credit money based upon gold that trade can be carried on successfully, but for us gold is the only real measure of trade.

As I have pointed out before, up until 1873 the monetary system of the world, with the exception of England, was based upon gold and silver, which system is known as bimetallism.

England demonetized silver in 1816, largely, it is claimed, by reason of a family of bankers who owned billions of dollars of bonds of various nations and 90 per cent of the gold mines of the world, realizing that by striking down silver, one-half of the money supply of the world, it would double the value both of their bonds and their gold mines.

The demonetization of silver in the United States in 1873 became known as the crime of '73. Congressman Bright, who was a Member of the House at the time the demonetization act was passed, declared, "It passed by fraud in the House, never having been printed in advance, being a substitute for the printed bill; never having been read at the Clerk's desk, the reading having been dispensed with by an impression that the bill made no material alteration in the coinage laws; it was passed without discussion, debate having been cut off by operation of the previous question. * * * Aye, sir, it was fraud that smells to heaven."

Other leaders in Congress issued similar statements. President Grant declared, "I did not know the act of 1873 demonetized silver; I was deceived in the matter." John G. Carlisle, at one time Secretary of the Treasury, stated, "Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population and industry. According to my views of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three-sevenths to one-half of the metallic money of the world, is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age. The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences, and famines that ever occurred in the world."

My contention is that the present world-wide deplorable conditions are due to (1) the failure of the gold mines of the world to produce enough money metal to supply the world's increasing needs; and, secondly, and perhaps of more importance than the first, is the maldistribution of the gold of the world, 70 per cent of which is held by France and the United States.

Opponents to the bill introduced by me something over a year ago, to remonetize silver on the basis of 16 to 1, the exact ratio which we maintained up to 1873, are challenging the statements which I have just made by statements such as was made by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, in a speech read in Kansas City on February 11, 1933, in which he said: "They start with the unwarranted assumption that the supply of gold and money both in the world and in the United States, is inadequate to support a satisfactory price level. As far as the world is concerned, since 1913, the world monetary gold reserves have increased from nearly five billion to about twelve billion, or nearly 150 per cent, while the production of basic commodities at the highest point of 1929 was nearly one-third larger than in 1913."

HOW ABOUT WORLD DEBTS AND WORLD COMMERCE?

"As far as this country is concerned," he continued, "as compared with 1929, our gold stock has increased, our bank reserves have increased, and currency thus increased. The present difficulty arises from inability to put to work our ample monetary reserves."

I cite this as a typical statement of those who are in favor of continuing the present gold standard with accompanying low commodity prices. Every student of political economy should realize by now that in order for the gold standard to function properly in the world so that the various countries can expand their currencies and thereby expand their purchasing power in the world markets, it is necessary for them to have their proper share of the gold reserves of the world. They do not have this to-day.

One of the great difficulties in the world to-day is that more than 40 countries have had to go off the gold standard because of the fact that they did not have and could not get the gold in sufficient amount to expand their currency in accordance with the development of their industries and commerce or to meet the payment of their obligations to foreign countries.

If a country has to contract its currency and does contract it by reason of the fact that it has not sufficient gold as a basis for its currency, then it must have the effect of depreciating commodity prices in that country in relation to gold; and if a sufficient number of countries find themselves in the same position, then it must have the effect of not only depreciating prices throughout the world but drying up the purchasing power. To-day the leading commercial nations of the world, with the exception of France and the United States, find themselves in a position where they are unable to get and retain gold. It necessarily has the effect of depreciating world commodity prices in terms of gold, because as the demand for gold becomes keener the supply becomes insufficient, and whether it is caused from hoarding by one or two countries or for any other reason matters little. The fact is that these countries had to go off the gold standard, depreciate their currencies; and when they depreciated their currencies the effect upon this country was immediately felt, as is evidenced by the statements of President Hoover, Charles E. Mitchell, and Mr. Harriman, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

In his message to Congress December 19, 1932, President Hoover said: "It is certain that the most urgent economic effort still before the world is the restoration of price levels. * * * That price levels have been seriously affected by abandonment of the gold standard by many countries and the consequent instability and depreciation of foreign currencies * * *. The depreciation of foreign currencies lowers the costs of production abroad compared to our costs of production."

He reaffirmed in substance the above statement last evening.

President Hoover here calls attention to the fact that depreciated currency in other countries lowers their costs of production compared to our costs of production. That is the reason why these countries can undersell the American manufacturers in the markets of the world.

On December 16, 1932, Mr. H. I. Harriman, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in an open letter declared: "For a year and three months depreciated currencies have been exerting an undermining influence upon our economic situation. First, by negativing our tariffs so that in our home markets American goods have been displaced, factory output cut down, and unemployment increased; second, by depressing price levels and preventing any upward price movement to a basis of fair return for American labor and capital. * * *."

In the Chicago Tribune of January 11 appears a statement by Mr. Charles E. Mitchell, of the National City Bank of New York, as follows:

"Of vital importance to the progress of recovery in this country is the reestablishment of a stable relationship between the dollar and foreign currencies, thus relieving our price structure from the most destructive of all kinds of competition, namely, that of depreciating currencies of competing nations."

Here we have three clear-cut, concise statements from the President of the United States, from the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and from Charles E. Mitchell, of the National City Bank, each of them declaring that the depreciated currencies of other countries, which are off the gold standard, enjoy a distinct advantage over the United States for the reason that their depreciated currencies give them a lower production cost for commodities and manufactured goods than the costs of production in the United States.

I repeat, it should be borne in mind that these countries depreciated their currencies because of the fact that they were unable to get or retain a sufficient amount of gold upon which to base their currency. It has been suggested we insist that they go back on the gold standard. How? I ask. By giving them our gold?

Again, I want to call as a witness to refute the statements made by Mr. Mills and others, one of the leading experts of Great Britain and the world on gold and money matters, the late Mr. Joseph Kitchin. According to the Associated Press of Sunday, February 12, 1933, his contention was "that an adequate world supply of gold for use as monetary reserves is not in itself sufficient under the conditions of an international gold standard to insure a stable price level."

"The total supply," he goes on to say, "must also be distributed among the different national monetary systems in such a way that each important country or group of countries is assured of having large enough reserves to expand the gold basis of its currency in accordance with the development of its industry and commerce.

"If the distribution is not equitable in this sense, and if the steady concentration of gold in a few countries causes a progressive shrinkage of resources in the other countries of the world, restriction will spread to the whole world. The gold-accumulating countries will find their ample reserves are no safeguard against falling prices and the attendant depression of trade.

"Gains of gold in such circumstances are therefore of no advantage to the receiving countries and the cause of much misery to the world as a whole."

Is there anyone who would challenge the correctness of Mr. Kitchin's statement in the light of the experience of this and other countries during the past few years? What, then, becomes of the argument that there is enough gold and enough currency either here or abroad?

The question of whether or not there is enough gold in the United States or enough currency in this country is not all-important. It is not only necessary to have a sufficient amount of gold or a sufficient amount of currency in a country, but it is necessary to have that currency circulate among the people with a sufficient velocity to maintain commodity prices. The answer to those who say that there is sufficient gold in the United States and sufficient currency is to say that it is not being circulated with sufficient velocity among the people of the country to do us any good. The farmers and workers to-day as well as the commercial interests and manufacturing interests of the Nation, are truly being crucified upon a cross of gold.

More than a year has passed since I introduced my bill in the Senate, the purpose of which was to remove the trade barriers which President Hoover brought to the attention of Congress in his message of December 19, 1932, almost a year later, and to stabilize monetary exchange rates between gold-standard and silver-using nations, as well as the countries off the gold standard entirely.

I asserted on the floor of the Senate that the enactment of my bill into law would, first, immediately thereafter nearly double the volume of the world's primary money, with the resultant increased conservative credit basis of twenty times the amount of primary money thus added to the world's stock.

Second, within one year after the enactment of this bill the world's price of wheat, cotton, and all agricultural products would be more than trebled.

Third, the purchasing power of over 50 per cent of the entire world's population now using silver as their sole yardstick of exchange and business transaction would contemporaneously be quadrupled; that is, the value of the silver stock would increase from 30 cents to $1.30, resulting in the creation of a market which would more than absorb all the surplus of our raw materials and manufactured products.

Within two years all our present agricultural land values throughout the United States would be more than quadrupled, thereby transforming the present frozen assets of the country banks in agricultural communities into liquid assets.

The unemployed labor problem would be rapidly solved.

Both labor and capital would be benefited.

Contentment, happiness, and lucrative occupation would be substituted for discontentment and despair, with their inevitable resultant tragedies to follow.

It would relieve starvation in the midst of plenty.

This legislation would do more than all suggestions heretofore combined toward reviving, encouraging, vitalizing, and resuscitating business in this country and throughout the world.

The market prices of securities, especially the common stocks of all corporations enjoying honest, efficient managements and being properly financed, where listed on some of the great stock exchanges of this country, would almost contemporaneously show increased activity and market value.

Since I made this declaration on the floor of the Senate, no Senator has accepted the challenge and brought forth any valid reason or argument to show why the passage of my bill would not accomplish these things.

Questions have been raised, and some have expressed fears, but no argument has been brought forth that would tend to prove the unsoundness of my bill.

On the contrary, since that statement was uttered on the floor of the Senate, several outstanding economists and bankers have uttered statements favorable to the adoption of the same.

Let me now quote briefly what two prominent Englishmen have recently said about the importance of remonetizing silver: First, the statement by Sir Osborne A. Smith, governor of the Imperial Bank of India, quoted in the London Times, January, 1933, which is in substance as follows:

"The economists throughout the world are agreed that maldistribution of gold and overproduction of goods are two of the fundamental causes of the depression. If we consider the fact that the great masses of the Orient are half starved and less than half clad, one can not say that there is overproduction in terms of requirements, but rather that there is overproduction in terms of purchasing power. Our job, then, is to recreate purchasing power and we have the instruments at hand in silver, of which these masses are possessed. The remonetization of silver will furnish us with a needed purchasing power and will cause to disappear through consumption, the world overproduction of goods."

The statement by Sir Robert Horne, ex-Chancellor of the British Exchequer, quoted in the New York Times, January 30, 1933, declares:

"* * * Rehabilitation of silver would help more rapidly than any other device to raise commodity prices and restore trade, which in recent years has disappeared owing to the abnormal decline in the value of silver. * * * Depreciation in the value of silver in recent years through government sales of discarded silver coin in the silver countries has lessened the values of savings of a thousand million people in the East, and it has imposed a check upon purchases which would have been made from the factories of America * * *. If the leading nations were to again constitute silver a part of their metallic reserves, this degenerating process would be reversed."

I now quote from the Saturday Evening Post of January 14 1933, on "Boom China":

"With their [silver] money at such a disadvantage outside their country, Chinese consumers must turn overwhelmingly to native-made goods. It—the fall of silver—made China's raw produce so cheap for gold-standard countries that her export trade has remained through the depression at nearer to normal than that of any other nation * * * with Chinese mills registering one of their most profitable years, expanding in full production in this third year of world-wide idleness."

I would also like to quote from an article in the Washington Herald of January 22, 1933, by Mr. G. Bowie Chipman, Washington resident partner of the New York Stock Exchange firm of Harriman & Co. in which he says:

"On January 5 of last year, Senator WHEELER, of Montana, introduced a bill in the Senate known as the Wheeler bill, S. 2487, the enactment of which would reestablish the honest or stable dollar of our forefathers as initiated by them in 1792 and enjoyed by the people of this country to 1873. In my opinion, this is the most important piece of legislation that has been suggested either in the United States or any other country in the whole world since 1873, when silver was demonetized by the United States.

* * * * * * *

"Under the Wheeler bill it is not proposed to purchase silver but to place the stamp of the United States mint on silver bullion on a ratio of 16 to 1."

I now want to call your attention to a telegram which was forwarded to the International Monetary Conference held in England in 1894. It will show you what the outstanding statesmen believed the remonetization would do for the world.

"We desire to express our cordial sympathy with the movement to promote the restoration of silver by international agreement, in aid of which we understand a meeting is to be held to-morrow, under your lordship's presidency. We believe that the free coinage of both gold and silver, by international agreement at a fixed ratio, would secure to mankind the blessings of a sufficient volume of metallic money, and, what is hardly less important, would secure to the world of trade immunity from violent exchange fluctuations. (Signed) John Sherman, William B. Allison, D. W. Voorhees, H. C. Lodge, G. F. Hoar, N. W. Aldrich, D. B. Hill, E. Murphy,

C. S. Brice, O. H. Platt, A. P. Gorman, W. P. Frye, C. K. Davis, S. M. Cullom, J. M. Carey."

What a galaxy of statesmen.

The adoption of my bill would force upon the world what these men were seeking by international agreement. I would like to see it accomplished by international agreement if it could be done, but I agree with Will Rogers that "America never lost a war but she never won a conference." We have the power at the present time, by reason of our economic position in the world, to force the rest of the world to adopt bimetallism. This can be done by the Congress of the United States passing my bill. England and France would have to adopt bimetallism or lose the trade of South America and the Orient, as well as other countries. They did not consult us when they depreciated their money. Why do we have to consult them.

To those who fear that this country would be flooded with silver if my bill were enacted into law, let me say, where would this flood of silver come from?

According to official figures, the largest annual world production of silver was in 1929, when it reached 260,970,029 fine ounces.

We need not fear a flood of silver, because silver is usually a by-product of copper, lead, or zinc, and its production is governed by the production of these other metals.

Again, much of the hoarded silver of India and China is in the form of ornaments, which are prized highly because of family or religious associations, and would not be used in any commercial way unless all other sources of revenue had been exhausted.

It has been suggested to me that if this bill passed we might get large withdrawals of gold, and gold would go into hiding. In the first place, let me say that my understanding is that practically all of the gold that was earmarked in this country left the United States about a year ago or more. There are some commercial balances in this country. They might possibly be withdrawn; likewise, there might be some withdrawal of gold upon the part of our own people; but I am informed by what I consider to be one of the highest authorities in this country that in any sort of an inflation, whether it be by managed currency, fiat money, passing the bonus, or the expansion of currency through Government expenditures of large sums of money in payment of projects which it might start, there would be immediately some gold withdrawn, not because of the remonetization of silver, but because of the fact that any sort of an inflation will cause gold to be hoarded for a short time; but I repeat, because of our strategic position, our trade balance, our economic situation and financial position in the world, gold would continue to come into this country, and what little gold was taken out would soon come back again. Our trade balances are bound to increase rather than decrease if we remonetized silver.

To those who fear that the United States should not adopt bimetallism alone, let me call to your attention the fact that the Latin Union was able to successfully operate under bimetallism although their combined wealth and commerce was relatively less than that of the United States.

One of three things is going to happen in the immediate future: Either we are going to raise world commodity prices and thereby increase the purchasing power of the people or we will have to have a wholesale slashing of wages, together with increased unemployment, more bank failures, more railroad receiverships, more bankruptcies, and more sales and foreclosures of farms for taxes and mortgages. In other words, we are right at the crossroads and the Congress of the United States has got to decide as to which road it is going to travel. We can go along the lines of least resistance by letting conditions drift and get worse and worse. We can cut wages further, thereby adding to the deflation and making it impossible for debtors to pay what they owe. As a result there would of necessity be a general liquidation of indebtedness and a complete reorganization of all business and commercial enterprises in the United States. The wealth of the Nation would thereby be accumulated in the hands of still fewer and fewer people. On the other hand, we can take a more courageous stand; double the primary money of the world by the adoption of bimetallism, thereby raising world commodity price levels, giving purchasing power to over one-half of the world's population, which they do not possess to-day; put men back to work in our factories and mines instead of letting them tramp the streets; save the farmers' homes; and hurt no individual or class of individuals in this or any other country.

Have we the intestinal stamina to do it? We have not unless you people in your homes start now—to-night—and demand of your Representatives that it be done and done quickly to save this country and your home and your fireside.

In conclusion, let me quote a short poem by George E. Phair, entitled "Oh, for a Lincoln Now," as follows:

His was the hand that broke the iron chain
And raised the burden from a bonded race;
His was the hand predestined to efface
A Nation's guilt—and wipe away the stain.
And now across the years he hears again
The cries he strove to make the world forget:
Despairing farmers chained by hopeless debt,
White-collar slaves reduced to want and pain,
Slaves of the bread line, standing in the cold,
Begging a humble crust of bread to eat,
While granaries are overwhelmed with wheat
And in the banks the coffers burst with gold.

Oh, for a Lincoln now with dauntless hand
To break the golden chain that gripes the land!

FEDERAL AID FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5125) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, time and circumstance have much to do with our outlook. In some instances conditions are even arbiters of our vocabularies, and words we once held in contempt we now use of necessity. Public relief measures carrying large appropriations would but yesterday have been called "doles" by millions who to-day are seeking relief.

The ravages of time, brief though the period may be, have dealt unkindly with the worker of high and low estate, whether he be laborer, banker, shopkeeper, or practitioner, and the men and women who once answered the factory's whistle or bell are now, against their will, going to the relief stations and are saying, "We must live, but we are unable to find work." These American citizens in their humility have arrived at their conclusion by descending steps. In my neighborhood the first step to the relief station was in a roundabout way, through back streets and alleys. However, with no hope of work, they have pocketed their pride and accepted the inevitable as a matter of course. Nor can they be blamed. They are unable to find work. Meanwhile, although the cost of living has not increased, it has not declined anywhere near the reduction in the size of the part-time pay envelope or the community relief check.

Although to-day seeking public and private relief, there are hundreds of thousands now unemployed who in days gone by gave, and gave freely, to private community chests. But when the funds of private philanthropy were exhausted, the community turned for aid first to the town or township or to the county. The step to State relief was a short one, and now, in their dire distress, they are appealing to the National Government.

In the county in western Pennsylvania in which I was reared and where my aged father still resides, I am reliably informed that out of the 100,000 people who live in that county, 20 per cent are receiving public relief. I am personally acquainted with many of them, and I am sure not one is accepting relief who would not prefer a thousand times to go proudly to the mills or to the factories to toil and support his family rather than to go, with head bowed low, to a relief station for food for his family.

When the Army appropriation bill was before the Senate, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] paved the way for an appropriation of $22,000,000 whereby young men traveling over the country from city to city seeking employment would be cared for in the citizens' military training camps. Many of these young men, in their search for work, have appealed not only to me but to many other Senators. Some of these young men who came to see me were the sons and grandsons of men I have known for half a century; they are real, genuine citizens of their respective communities. They know the conditions at home; they know there is but little left to provide for those who are unable to travel elsewhere to seek work; and so they start on their way, earnestly seeking work, with the one thought in their minds, that they may help provide the necessities of life for other members of their families. The proud spirit of America is their armor.

To those without funds who are seeking relief, prices mean very little. Cut-throat prices mean the destruction of buying power; they mean that investors receive no return upon their money, and that employers' and workers' incomes are reduced to such a low state that those gainfully employed are unable to help those who are unemployed. To continue cut-throat competition until prices reach European and Asiatic levels will mean that the buying power of the gainfully employed in America will be on the same basis as in Europe and the Orient.

Mr. President, let us face the facts. Ten million American workers are idle; many millions more are on part time. In the past these workers, when employed, have contributed most liberally to those in need. They have saved, built their homes and tried to pay for them, and now they find themselves not only penniless but in many instances deprived of the ownership of their homes. Many who still own their homes are unable to secure loans on them and are driven to seek public relief. Unable to pay taxes; yea, even unable to buy the necessities of life, they must seek public relief. Credit is no longer available to them at the stores or banks; hence, what is there left for them to do but to seek relief?

No one will deny that those who are now unemployed have had extended to them credit running into hundreds of millions of dollars; so when they do return to work it will be many, many months before they will be able to participate in the buying power of the Nation other than to the extent of purchasing the bare necessities of life. Wages have been reduced, and all they can earn will go to paying off what are termed "bills payable."

Mr. President, those of us who have given some thought to the question of undernourishment incident to the war know that in the sections of countries immediately affected by the war the greatest damage was that which in the future will be directly traceable to the undernourishment of children. We owe no higher duty than the duty we owe to childhood, even at the expense of an unbalanced Budget. We have always had pity for the homeless child.

Did it ever occur to you, Mr. President, that in the current depression the children of the unemployed are in a worse plight than those that inhabit orphanages or other institutions dedicated to the welfare of childhood? Innumerable citizens, now unemployed, have donated to such institutions through the church-collection basket, the welfare-board solicitor, and other fund-raising agencies. To-day, after hopelessly canvassing the employment offices in quest of any kind of a job, many of those who in the past have been generous contributors trudge home, only to hear the bitter wails of their famished families. Is it not therefore time, Mr. President, for the Congress to give a practical interpretation to the biblical promise that bread cast on water shall return; that the five talents shall be returned an hundredfold?

Shall we treat mankind with less consideration than we show the beasts of the field, the birds of the air, or vegetation of our fields and forests? In this very Chamber we annually appropriate funds to combat the cattle tick, to exterminate the boll weevil, to protect our game and our forests; and in doing so we boast of an altruistic spirit toward these animate and inanimate, though dumb, wards. Can anyone honestly be generous to one and penurious to the other?

What a stupendous economic loss to society there is involved in the failure to develop the human resources of thousands of dependent children! If the campaigns to conserve forests, water power, and petroleum were all to be abandoned in favor of the scientific development and conservation of the potential ability of the neglected children of America, I believe that the Nation's gain would be immeasurably greater. As it is now, too many of the dependent children of America are placed on a dead level, thus killing the hope and ambition and talent of those who possess such qualities, and filling the lives of the others with a ruinous sense of inferiority and despondency.

Will the people of America have done their duty until they establish, at least, the same standard for the thousands of children of idle but honest citizens as is maintained for the children who populate our institutions? The child who is thoroughly equipped to earn an honest living, to the limit of his mental and physical capacity, will repay society a thousandfold for the appropriation now being considered.

Mr. President, there is no charity like the charity of the poor to the poor. They welcome another to their household when it is difficult to provide for their own. To-day three and four families are huddled in one house. They have a community of interest now as never before. Think what this means in the curtailment of the consumption of fuel and lights and in other items, such as the use of the telephone. It is contribution to the seemingly endless cycle of a reduced buying power.

Mr. President, I know what it is to be in the same condition as that of the young men who are to-day traveling the highways and byways or riding freight trains, going from town to town seeking employment. I, too, in years gone by, followed that harrowing path, and at that time I had but one hope—to find work in order that I might be able to be helpful to those who were responsible for my coming into the world.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I will conclude in just a moment.

Mr. FESS. I should like to ask the Senator a question at that point.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Pennsylvania is a fine example, one of the best I know, of a self-made man. But when he was roaming around looking for work he was not expecting the Federal Government or anybody else to support him; in his search for work he was willing to do anything necessary to make himself self-supporting. Are we now pursuing the course that was being pursued when the exigencies under which the Senator who is now speaking labored were operating to make the man that has been made out of him. That is a question that I should like to have the Senator answer.

Mr. DAVIS. The circumstances are now somewhat different, because of the fact that many of these men have been idle for nearly three years—probably four years in the case of some of them. Their credit is gone. The city and the community and the State are unable to provide for them. To whom must they look for relief?

Mr. FESS. The Senator knows very well that if he had had some wet nurse to look after him, in the form of the city or the State or the Nation, he would not be the man that he is to-day.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, I do not know. If I had been idle as long as most of those who are now out of work have been idle, perhaps I would have had to have some one wet-nurse me.

I do not challenge the assertion, Mr. President, that it would be well to balance the Federal Budget; but we should not think of balancing our Budget without first satisfying the needs of our needy people.

No child should go to school ahungered or athirst, nor should the adults of his family be neglected; for if we neglect the health of the child of to-day we will pay the price, and pay for it dearly, when that child shall attain his majority; the Nation's regimen will be impaired and our courts of justice—yes, even our penal institutions—will be overcrowded. The child of to-day is the citizen of to-morrow; and, in my opinion, the most practical lesson in patriotism can be taught him through the stomach, which is far more sensitive than his eyes or ears. To me, the child is the hand of God recording on the universal pages of time the history of the human race.

I hope, Mr. President, the pending legislation will be approved by the Senate of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a short time ago the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] suggested that he had an amendment which he desired to offer. He said he would be in the restaurant. I have not seen him since; but I feel under obligations to state the fact that he desires to offer a slight amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires to offer an amendment, now is the time it should be submitted. Personally, I do not care to address the Senate on this question until the substitute offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has been perfected, and is the pending question.

In view of the statement made by the Senator from Colorado I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Cutting | Keyes | Sheppard |
| Austin | Dale | King | Shipstead |
| Bailey | Davis | La Follette | Shortridge |
| Bankhead | Dickinson | Lewis | Smith |

| Coolidge | Hull | Robinson, Ark. | Watson |
| Copeland | Johnson | Robinson, Ind. | White |
| Costigan | Kean | Russell | |
| Couzens | Kendrick | Schuyler | |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Massachusetts offers the following amendment:

On page 6, line 5, after the word "markets," insert the following: "including markets for the purpose of buying, selling, warehousing, or storing of agricultural commodities and livestock."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to broaden the interpretation of the word "markets for public use."

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I think very properly, in view of the language of the existing law, has defined in general terms a public market as a place that is open to anyone who wishes to hire space for the transaction of business and where sales transactions are made. The Boston Terminal Co. sought a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, claiming that its purpose came within the term "market," and was denied the granting of a loah, although I think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was not unsympathetic with the plan and purpose.

The Boston Terminal Co. was to be a receiving warehouse for agricultural products which were to be held and later distributed to the public markets of the city of Boston and its vicinity.

The matter was in great doubt as to whether legally the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could make a loan to the Boston Terminal Co. for building an extensive market for the purpose which it outlined, and the opinions of various people were sought, among others, that of Mr. Nicholas P. McNair, professor of marketing at Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration. He was of the opinion that the project for the Boston distributional terminal seemed to fall definitely within the terms of the act. The purpose of this amendment is, as I stated in the beginning, to broaden the interpretation of the term "market." I understand it is acceptable to the Senator from New York, and therefore it is unnecessary to debate the matter any longer. I ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, is the substitute of the Senator from New York the pending amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have received inquiry from private educational, charitable, and religious institutions which have, during the depression, been desirous of expanding their activities; but, though no question has been raised as to their financial standing, they have been unable under existing law to make any loan with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I inquire of the Senator whether the language in his amendment is sufficiently broad to permit loans being made to educational, charitable, and religious institutions which are financially sound, and which would be considered by the ordinary banking institution in normal times capable of meeting their obligations?

Mr. WAGNER. Private institutions?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Private educational institutions, such as Harvard University or Yale University.

Mr. WAGNER. No; the proposed act would not permit loans to be made to such an institution.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What would be the view of the Senator in reference to presenting an amendment proposing that the act be expanded to permit such a class of institutions to borrow money at this time?

Mr. WAGNER. When the bill was before us last year for the relief of unemployment, efforts were made to enlarge the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so as to extend them to loans to private institutions, and an amendment looking to that end was rejected by the Senate as tending to take the Government into a tremendous field, probably beyond the power of the Federal Government to go.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was in sympathy with that object, but it seems to me that it is a question whether certain educational institutions are not self-liquidating.

Mr. WAGNER. Undoubtedly this depression has presented a number of these very difficult problems. The Banking and Currency Committee to-day had before it a committee representing the mayors of the United States seeking to enlarge the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that loans may be made in order that the municipalities may pay their fixed charges, pay interest upon their outstanding bonds, and refinance the bonds which are coming to maturity. The Senator can understand that while the committee is in sympathy with their plight, if we open that field, the Federal Government will be called upon to finance all the municipalities of the country, probably.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is exactly true, and, of course, it would not add anything to the relief of unemployment, which is the objective the Senator seeks.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But would it not be wise, in an effort to relieve unemployment, to expend millions of dollars during this time of depression, when costs of building are low, for educational purposes and religious purposes, where the security is unquestioned; and, of course, that is the basis of all loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; they must find that the things are safe. It seems to me, with the contracted means of borrowing money from the banks, we might perhaps add to the relief of unemployment by some legislation in the direction I have indicated.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator knows I am in sympathy with any action by Congress which would have the effect of putting men and women to work on useful projects, and I sympathize with the Senator's views, and perhaps it might be well for him to test the Senate on the proposition as to whether we want to extend the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that loans may be advanced to purely private institutions. It is a pretty large field.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I refer to private institutions which are educational, charitable, religious, and, of course, I would not think of such a proposal if I did not have in mind the objective the Senator has, that during this period of depression, not being able to get funds from the banks, but knowing that it is necessary to expand their institutions, they would adopt this course of getting the necessary money to extend certain projects. I would not, of course, propose it as a Government-loaning undertaking under any other circumstances.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that. Of course, all of this is legislation we would not think about if we were in normal times. But I can state to the Senator that there is hardly an activity—educational, eleemosynary, or business—representatives of which have not made appeals to me to enlarge the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that these purely private enterprises might be financed by the Government because of the depressed condition of the financial market. I do not know that we can go that far without breaking down the credit of the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am in sympathy with the Senator's views; and, let me add, I think many of us often wonder whether the step we have already taken will prove in the long run to be a wise one. Therefore I think we should proceed very cautiously in the expanding of this unusual and extraordinary governmental activity.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state whether or not there is anything in this bill by which a home owner would be enabled to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of saving foreclosure on his home which has been mortgaged?

Mr. WAGNER. Not in this bill, but there is legislation pending, I may say to the Senator, which has that in view, which undoubtedly is emergency legislation, and I am very confident it will be considered by the Congress before we adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not believe it could be passed unless it were passed on this bill. Would the Senator have any objection to enlarging the scope of the pending bill so as to authorize home owners in some way to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. WAGNER. I would not want to interfere with the very worthy activities of the colleague of the senior Senator from Tennessee, who has such legislation in charge, which has been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and, as I understand, is about to be considered by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope it will be considered. I really think we should not adjourn without making some provision for the home owners who are losing their homes all over the country.

Mr. WAGNER. It would be a tragedy if we adjourned without at least making an effort to alleviate that very serious situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it would be, and I wish that my colleague and the Senator from New York would get together and agree upon a provision to go into the pending bill, because I think this bill is very likely to pass, and the end of the session is drawing near; and, as the Senator has well stated, it would be a tragedy if we adjourned without protecting in some way, if we can, the home owners who are not only about to lose their homes under mortgages but are losing them every day through mortgage-foreclosure sales.

Mr. WAGNER. As I understand it, the proposal is to take up next the very legislation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from New York, I observed that, while I was out of the Chamber yesterday afternoon attending a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency, an amendment was adopted to the pending bill which appears on page 4315 of the RECORD, at the middle of the page, first column. I dislike to have to repeat anything that may have occurred yesterday, but I observe that the Senate adopted the following provision:

"SEC. 22. Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(3) to make loans to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of aircraft suitable for overseas transport and port facilities essential thereto, bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, and markets, devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character, and to make loans to private corporations formed wholly for the purpose of developing cooperative community farming and crop marketing to aid in financing projects undertaken by such corporations which are self-liquidating in character.'"

Mr. WAGNER. There are only two new features in that. Most of the language appears in the law now. The new features are for loans to private corporations for the construction of aircraft suitable for overseas transportation, and at the end, "loans to private corporations formed wholly for the purpose of developing cooperative community farming and crop marketing." Those are the new features.

Mr. COUZENS. Why does the Senator pick out private corporations manufacturing aircraft, balloons, and lighter-than-air machines?

Mr. WAGNER. That proposal was not in the bill as I originally introduced it, but a witness appeared before the committee urging this particular loan on the theory that it would give an opportunity for the development of aircraft of the overseas type without requiring a subsidy from the Government. His prediction was that eventually a subsidy perhaps would be sought to develop that method of transportation, because he said he regarded it as of great benefit to our commercial interests.

After that testimony the committee itself adopted this amendment to the bill as I originally introduced the measure. That is as much as I can tell the Senator about it, unless I read to him the testimony.

The amendment with regard to the cooperative community farming and crop marketing was an amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and he persuaded the committee to include that. That also was a committee amendment, not in my original bill. I am sorry the Senator from Florida is absent from the Chamber. I am sure he is ready to defend his own amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Was this amendment proposed by the Senator from New York adopted by the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. This language was in the bill as reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. COUZENS. But the Senator has added it to the so-called La Follette-Costigan bill, has he not?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; in that way it was an amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Has that amendment been voted on yet?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. That was voted on yesterday?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand from the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that the vote by which it was agreed to has been reconsidered.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was my understanding that the Senate voted to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment offered by the Senator from New York on yesterday afternoon, to which reference has been made by the Senator from Michigan, was agreed to. Upon the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] the vote was reconsidered, and the Senator from Colorado then proposed a perfecting amendment, which was agreed to, but the amendment as amended has not yet been voted upon and is therefore pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). The Chair may say that the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I beg the Chair's pardon. I do not think that is accurate. I have proposed my whole bill as a substitute for the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin; and that being now before the Senate, the Senator from Michigan may offer amendments to this particular provision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan will yield to me for a further interruption, the parliamentary situation is that the vote by which the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from New York was agreed to was reconsidered, and the amendment of the Senator from New York is now open to further amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Or defeat.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is open to amendment and to final disposition.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. The reconsideration took place while I was out of the Chamber; but I have no objection to that, of course.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from New York was in the Chamber. It was done at the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], in order that he might perfect the amendment with regard to reservoirs and waterworks, and reconsideration had to be had in order that his amendment might be offered.

Mr. WAGNER. It does not matter one way or another. The amendment is now up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] as amended. It is still open to amendment. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not want to take action while the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is out of the Chamber.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator from Florida ought to be sent for because it is an amendment in which he is interested.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; he should be sent for. I intend to move to strike out the whole of section 3. If the other provisions to which the Senator from New York refers are already in the law, there is no necessity for repetition and the whole section might go out.

Mr. WAGNER. Except that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] offered another amendment to this section this morning, to which I do not think the Senator from Michigan will object, which would also be wiped out if the entire section were stricken out of the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Was the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado adopted by the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. I understood that it was.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; it was.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the language to which the Senator objects that which I am about to read?—

(3) To make loans to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of aircraft suitable for overseas transport and port facilities essential thereto, bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts——

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator need read no further. I had particularly in mind the first three lines which the Senator from Tennessee has just read, because, as I understand from the Senator from New York, bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, and waterworks are already in the law.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I think the Senator will accomplish his purpose if he simply offers an amendment striking out the provision permitting loans for the construction, replacement, or improvement of aircraft suitable for overseas transport and port facilities essential thereto.

Mr. COUZENS. That is the only amendment that I want.

Mr. WAGNER. The other provision follows:

To make loans to private corporations formed wholly for the purpose of developing cooperative community farming and crop marketing to aid in financing projects undertaken by such corporation which are self-liquidating in character.

Mr. COUZENS. That is the other amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. That will accomplish the Senator's purpose?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; in part. I want to make sure of another provision, and that is whether or not these loans are to be secured in any way.

Mr. WAGNER. That provision has not been changed in any way.

Mr. COUZENS. What has not been changed?

Mr. WAGNER. The provision in the present law that adequate security shall be provided, and in addition the project must be of a self-liquidating character.

Mr. COUZENS. But we have already stricken out the words "other than by taxation."

Mr. WAGNER. The private corporations have no power to tax.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand; but if a private corporation, as proposed by the Senator from New York, desires to——

Mr. WAGNER. I told the Senator under what circumstances it was proposed. These are amendments inserted by the committee in the bill which I have produced.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not disputing the Senator in that connection. I am pointing out that no matter what the committee did——

Mr. WAGNER. I may say that taxation is not involved in this particular section, because private corporations have no power to levy taxes.

Mr. COUZENS. I am coming to that. Let me give the Senator an illustration of what might happen. I understand this is under consideration in the States now. A private corporation organizes a market, a place where they set up stalls for farmers and others to dispose of their produce. It is possible to work with the community so that the expenses in part will be paid by taxes and a part by private interests. For example, there are public markets now in many cities that are supported by taxation and fees.

Mr. WAGNER. Private corporations supported by taxation?

Mr. COUZENS. No. It works both ways. Sometimes it is a private corporation which has the use of the land free or other concessions which obviously are supported in part by taxation, because when a property is exempt from taxation of course it contributes to extinguish the taxable property. But that is not what I particularly have in mind.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has entered the Chamber. May I say to him that we are discussing the proposal of developing cooperative community farming and crop marketing. The Senator will remember the amendment was proposed in the committee. The Senator from Michigan is addressing himself to that feature of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think it is a very important subject. I know of opportunities where people who may be without work and without any prospect of work are able to join a cooperative organization and develop certain land areas where they can make a living. They may not make a great deal of profit. It is not strictly a colonization scheme, but it partakes of that nature, where people are put on farms where they can make a living. It is cooperative in its nature and they must be given some financial help.

Mr. COUZENS. What is the money to be used for?

Mr. FLETCHER. For taking care of their operations. For instance, a farmer sometimes needs a little money for financing his actual cultivation, for fertilizer, seed, and similar expenses. I think the land will be acquired by a cooperative organization and the buildings will be put up by private capital or by the capital of the organization, but the people who buy lots and houses will need some capital to finance their operations.

Mr. COUZENS. In other words, under the provisions of the bill as I read them, any real-estate-promotion scheme could come under the provisions of the bill if a cooperative organization was formed to deal with it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not say that is the case, because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation looking into the proposal, will determine whether it is a real estate promotion scheme. It is intended in good faith to furnish an opportunity for all kinds of people, lawyers, bankers, and other professional men who are without any work at all in the big cities, and other people as well who have been workers and are now without jobs. It is to afford them an opportunity to acquire a home under this system and enough land, 20 or 30 or 40 acres, to enable them to make a living. It would give them not only something to do, but thousands of people would take advantage of it and be able to make a living.

Mr. COUZENS. I have no desire or thought of impugning the intentions of the Senator from Florida, but when he leaves the interpretation of this provision to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation I am unwilling to agree. In other words, the Senator from Florida would leave to the directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the decision under this broad language, and I still insist that under the language there would happen exactly what I said before—the incorporation of great real-estate subdivision developments into a proposal such as indicated here which would receive money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There is no provision in the amendment whatsoever about security for the Government. If the beneficiaries about whom the Senator just spoke are poor and without work and this enables them to get a living, how in good conscience are they going to buy the real estate and put up the homes?

Mr. FLETCHER. I happen to know of philanthropic people who are interested in finding work to care for the distressed all over the country, who are advancing funds for this purpose. It is more of a philanthropic or benevolent enterprise than it is any money-making scheme.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Michigan on the amendment has expired. He is recognized on the bill if he so desires.

Mr. COUZENS. I desire to offer another amendment, and then I shall have 15 minutes on that amendment, I believe?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. COUZENS. I offer an amendment to strike out the words "to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of aircraft suitable for overseas transport and port facilities essential thereto."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. I would suggest that there be stricken out only the words "of aircraft suitable for overseas transport and port facilities essential thereto," leaving the language as it is in the present law:

To make loans to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, and markets—

And so forth.

Mr. COUZENS. I adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin. I am not going to discuss that particular amendment now because it seems to me obvious that that language should not be in the act. I am going to discuss for a moment the other amendments which I shall propose later to eliminate the words:

To make loans to private corporations formed wholly for the purpose of developing cooperative community farming and crop marketing.

The Senator from Florida has the best of intentions, I have no doubt, but a study of the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and a consideration of the political influences directed to the making of loans for specific purposes should be a warning to the Congress not to leave these matters wide open to their discretion.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum before we are called upon to act upon this particular amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Connally | Grammer | Moses |
| Austin | Coolidge | Harrison | Neely |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The pending question is the amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment, which the clerk will report.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the amendment has been somewhat changed and I will state it myself, if the Chair will permit me to do so. The amendment is to strike out the following words in section 22, subsection (3):

aircraft suitable for overseas transport and port facilities essential thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as stated by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out the following language, beginning in line 23, page 2:

and to make loans to private corporations formed wholly for the purpose of developing cooperative community farming and crop marketing to aid in financing projects undertaken by such corporations which are self-liquidating in character;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the senior Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that is the matter about which we had some discussion a little while ago. I will not repeat it, but I think it would be a great mistake to strike out the language referred to. The provision, if adopted, would open an opportunity for a great many people who have no work and who are without means of obtaining a living. There are enterprises ready to be put into operation, if sufficient capital can be obtained, more or less philanthropic in character, to enable such people to go upon farms in the country, on small tracts of land where they may make a living. That is the whole purpose of this provision and I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the language of the provision, of course, is broad enough to permit the obtaining of loans by real-estate companies engaged in the business of subdividing tracts of land into small lots of a few acres—5 or 10 acres—that may be near some city. That is one power that is granted. It would also permit loans to be extended to colonizing schemes, where real-estate organizations form private companies to go out and buy large areas of land and subdivide them into 5, 10, 20, or 40 acre tracts, and then induce people from the cities to go out and occupy those subdivided tracts of land. I say that the language incorporated in the bill as reported by the committee would permit loans to be made to activities of that sort.

I do not assume that the Government of the United States ought to engage in the project of aiding to finance the subdivision of lands near cities or the colonization of lands out in a State. We have had some experience with both such subdivision and colonization schemes and in most instances they have resulted in utter financial failure and have brought great distress to the people who were induced to move upon the tracts. I know of no case where they have been a success outside of some cooperative community farming that has been carried on by some religious cult. There have been some successful cooperative-farming operations under the keen zeal of religious inspiration; but those communities are not the ones intended to be benefited by the language of the bill. As a matter of fact, the language would permit real-estate agencies to subdivide land near cities, to colonize out in a State anywhere, and to finance the subdivisions and the colonization by money that would be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I think it is an unwise policy in the first instance to finance such undertakings, which, in the very nature of things, are speculative, and, in the second place, I think it is no part of the function of government to assist those who seek to induce innocent people to settle upon such subdivisions or to take up land under a colonization scheme.

I do not assume that the Senator from Florida had in mind or had the design to aid such undertakings as I have briefly outlined; but I have spoken merely for the purpose of indicating what can be done and in all probability would be done if the Congress of the United States should take such action as is proposed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to say that it is my purpose to find, if possible, homes for people who are without homes, and opportunity for people who are without opportunity. I have no interest in any money-making project at all; but to give people who are without homes and without resources and without opportunity, people who are idle and helpless, a chance to make a living and have homes of their own.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no doubt about the real sentiment which animates the Senator in promoting this provision of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment to the amendment. On page 3 of the amendment, I move to strike out section 23. That section provides—

> Subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is further amended by striking out "(other than by taxation)."

Mr. President, the question involved was carefully considered when the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act was passed. It was not contemplated that money should be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for self-liquidating projects which would eventually have to be paid by placing further taxation upon the people. Everyone knows that there is not a municipality or a county or a political subdivision in the United States to-day that is not overburdened with local taxes; and yet, if this proposal should be agreed to, it would be possible to start all kinds of so-called self-liquidating projects which would in themselves not be self-liquidating but which would eventually have to be financed by taxation and further burden the local citizens. I do not think the Congress should undertake any proposal which would eventuate in such conditions.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I merely want to say to the Senate that if this amendment is adopted there is no use in passing the legislation at all so far as it proposes to enlarge the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for public projects, for we are eliminating the self-liquidating feature of it because it is too restrictive a class to employ any large number of people.

We had evidence before our committee from representatives of municipalities and States, large business organizations, and leading engineers. All of them enumerated a number of projects throughout the country, very needful and in the public interest, that ought to be constructed now, and will have to be constructed within the next three or four years in any event in the progress of government. Their contention was, and rightly so, that this is the time to construct these projects, so as to help take up this economic slack. That was the original purpose of this whole legislation, to put people back to work; and the amendment of the Senator—though I know he does not mean it in that way—would restrict those efforts by the Federal Government to put people back to work.

We never will get out of this depression unless the Federal Government assists in efforts to reemploy people. Thus far our efforts have been directed toward holding up the financial structure of banks and railroad companies, which was undoubtedly necessary at the time to prevent a further depression, but it did not put anybody to work. This effort is to reemploy the workers of the United States. If the Senator's amendment is adopted, all these efforts will be meaningless, and I might just as well withdraw the entire legislation and all my efforts in that direction.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator if he expects that these loans that are to be made, to be paid off by taxation, will eventually be paid to the Federal Government?

Mr. WAGNER. Why, of course, they will be paid to the Federal Government. The committee's attention was called to a number of projects throughout the country where a good part of the expense of constructing the projects will come out of income after they are finished, but a part of it will have to be made up by taxation; and this great number of projects are ineligible under the present state of the law.

It is to make these projects eligible that this amendment was proposed. Those who came before our committee, the members of the board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, favored it as a necessary liberalization if we are to pursue this policy of attempting, by a public-works program of a substantial size, to absorb some of the unemployment.

Yesterday I put into the RECORD some figures showing that if the municipalities, the States, and the Federal Government had, as was proposed in a bill which was enacted two years ago, planned in advance their public construction beginning with the year 1925, we would have had about $4,000,000,000 available during the last two years for public construction. Instead of that, as the Senator knows, the municipalities, the States, and the Federal Government did most of their public construction at a time when we were prosperous, and, of course, added to the boom. The sane, sensible policy is to do our public construction at a time when there is an economic slack.

Everybody now agrees, I think—economists agree—that a public-works program in time of depression is one of the few ways we have of getting back to normalcy. Italy did it during this winter, and saved a possible serious depression and a large unemployment in that country.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. From the study and the hearings in which the Senator has participated, has he any idea what percentage of these costs will be paid out of taxation, and what percentage will be paid out of revenues?

Mr. WAGNER. No; but I think a very substantial percentage will be paid out of revenues, I might say to the Senator, because attention was called, for instance, to waterworks projects. Water is paid for mainly by the users in municipalities, but a good portion of the water is also used for fire-fighting purposes; so attempts have been made to estimate the amount of water which is consumed for fire-fighting purposes, and calculate that as part of the expense of maintenance of the particular public-works project. Therefore, the entire income is not sufficient to amortize the bonds and pay the annual interest upon those projects; but they are scattered all over the country. I am giving the Senator that just as an illustration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not think I sent the amendment to the desk. I have it in my hand; and I direct the attention of the Senator from Montana to page 3. My motion is to cut out section 23 of the amendment which is now pending.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Section 23?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; on page 3.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very deeply interested in that section of the amendment by reason of a situation which exists in my State. I have spoken about it on the floor of the Senate before. It seems to me the matter presents a project much to be commended, and on which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has refused to make a loan by reason of this provision of the act.

Let me explain.

The State of Montana levies a gasoline tax of 5 cents a gallon. That 5-cents-a-gallon tax is devoted to the purposes of road construction. Our State is 600 miles long and 400 miles wide, so that it will be perceived that with a population of 600,000 the burden is a very heavy one; yet the people of the State are willing to burden themselves with a tax of 5 cents a gallon for the purpose of constructing these highways, principally highways that are transcontinental in character. Two of them traverse the State from east to west, and another crosses diagonally from southeast to northwest.

In order to make this fund available presently for the rapid construction of the work and the prosecution of the work on an economical basis, the people of the State by a referendum vote have agreed to issue what are known as highway-commission bonds, for the payment of the interest on which, and the eventual redemption of which, all receipts from the 5-cent gasoline tax are pledged until the bonds are entirely redeemed. The revenues derived are entirely adequate to meet the current interest and eventually to retire the bonds.

My contention is that the words "by taxation" in the original statute did not include revenues derived in that way; and it seemed to me that the project was clearly a self-liquidating project not to be taken care of by taxation. I think that the words "by taxation," as used in the statute, meant revenues derived from the general taxation of the people of the State upon their property, or their income, or that kind of thing.

Mr. COUZENS. A sort of an ad valorem tax on the whole property?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; either on all property or upon income or other revenues, general revenues going into the general pot of the State, and not those revenues which are really derived, either immediately or otherwise, from the project itself; that is, from the enterprise upon which the money is expended.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, however, has ruled otherwise and insists that it is unable to do anything at all with these bonds—the entire value of which it concedes, the probability of their being paid from the resources back of them being confessed—on account of this provision; and, labor as I might, I was unable to convince the board of the correctness of my attitude with respect to the language "by taxation" in the original act.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Can the Senator give an illustration of a new project that might come under the classification he has just described?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. We could easily conceive that the State of Montana never undertook to improve the roads within its boundaries. Formerly, until within very recent years, the State of Montana never did undertake to construct any roads. That was left to the various counties of the State. We can very readily conceive that the State of Montana might now undertake to improve certain roads within the State. That would be a new enterprise being now installed by the State; but aid to it is forbidden under the construction given by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Would a project of this sort come under the jurisdiction of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? Assume that a city or a county wanted to put up a big office building, and rent one-third of it. That would be self-liquidating in part; and the other two-thirds would be collected as an ad valorem tax, in all probability, on all the property. Would the Senator approve of that sort of a loan?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should say that that would not be a self-liquidating enterprise. It would not be at all a self-liquidating enterprise if only one-third of it was rented, unless it might be anticipated that the rents from the one-third would cover the entire cost. Obviously, there the general revenues of the State would have to be relied upon for the discharge of the obligation.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from New York just illustrated that a project might be built from which the revenue would pay for a part of the cost, and the rest might have to be collected by taxation. It is clearly the intent of the Senator from New York that the kind of a project that is described would come under the provisions of the act; and that is the kind of a project that I have my doubts about the wisdom of having built by Government money.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suggest to the Senator, then, that instead of striking this out, perhaps it would be wiser to make some provision which would take care of the objectionable loans which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator believe it would be possible to draft an amendment providing that a certain percentage should come from self-liquidation, and another percentage from general taxation? I will ask the Senator from New York that question, if the Senator from Montana will yield for that purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think it would be exceedingly difficult, and I do not think it ought to be done.

What the Senator is trying to do is to frustrate all of these efforts to bring about a public-works program and put people back to work, because he is attempting to limit the type of project upon which loans may be made to those which are permitted under the present law; and experience has shown that there are not enough projects of that type to make a dent in our effort to fight this depression.

That is the reason why we were required to liberalize the law, so that in the case of any project which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may deem needful and in the public interest, and for which adequate security is given, so long as it is for a public purpose and is being handled by a public body, a municipality or a State, the loan may be made. That is the effort I am trying to make here; and if the Senator's amendment is agreed to, it simply means we are not going to have any public-works program with the aid of the Federal Government, and we might just as well give up all these efforts which some of us at least are trying to make to bring about better conditions.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I assure the Senator that I am just as anxious to put people back to work as he is, but I am also anxious that we not do the job in such a way that we shall be worse off in the end than when we began.

I ask the Senator whether he contemplates in his program that a city may design and build a great convention hall, the fees for which might pay, in part, the cost and amortization of the building, and, at the same time, place the great balance of the cost of it on the taxpayers? In other words, is he not encouraging, by this proposal, without any limitations, the doing of that very sort of thing?

Mr. WAGNER. No; because, in the first place, we have the limitation that the project must be needful as well as in the public interest, and undoubtedly an auditorium of the kind the Senator mentions would not be regarded in these days, in which we have dramatized economy, as a needful project. In all these things we have to lodge some responsibility, as well as discretion, somewhere, and we have to trust the officers administering these powers to exercise their own judgment in extending these loans.

I am sorry the Senator was not before the committee at the hearings. If he had been, he would have been persuaded that there is a large number of needful projects—for health service, water service—and all these different municipal as well as State services, which projects need to be erected very soon, and those proposing them persuaded us that the work ought to be undertaken at the present time.

I hope the Senator is not making his suggestion to defeat the legislation, because I think it is an unintentional calumny upon our municipalities to suggest that they are not going to repay the money which they borrow for the erection of their public buildings. It is unthinkable that they would not meet their indebtedness in that respect.

Mr. COUZENS. I think I have a very clear conception of the future, and that they will not be able to meet many of the debts they have already contracted, whether they be through issue of bonds sold to private people or whether they be obligations for money borrowed from the Federal Government.

Mr. WAGNER. If we do things to put people back to work, to restore the purchasing power to the pockets of the wage earners who support the business interests of the country, the municipalities will be in a position to collect their taxes and to pay their debts, because of the greater prosperity of business.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment now proposed, and later on I will draw an amendment which will be more in consonance with the views of the Senator from New York and the view expressed by the Senator from Montana, because I have no desire at all to prevent projects such as those described by the Senator from Montana, but I have a definite desire to prevent wastefulness in communities which might come to the Federal Government and get money for all their projects, in the hope that it never will be repaid.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes the following amendment, to be inserted on page 5, after line 19:

SEC. —. Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to make loans to any fund created by any State for the purpose of insuring the repayment of deposits of public moneys of such State or any of its political subdivisions in banks or depositories qualified under the law of such State to receive such deposits. Such loans may be made at any time prior to January 23, 1934, and upon such terms and conditions as the corporation may prescribe; except that any fund which receives a loan under this paragraph shall be required to assign to the corporation, to the expense of such loan, all amounts which may be received by such fund as dividends or otherwise from the liquidation of any such bank or depository in which deposits of such public moneys were made. As used in this paragraph, the term 'State' includes the several States and Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief explanation of the amendment.

This is not a bank-guaranty proposal. After the depression had proceeded for some time and banks began to fail, the surety companies which guaranteed the public deposits in the banks withdrew from that business, so that all public funds belonging to the States, counties, towns, cities, villages, and school districts were deposited in banks without any security whatever. It therefore became very obvious that it was necessary for the States to provide some method by which there could be some guaranty that the public deposits would be paid as they were needed to operate the respective governments, from the local government to the State government.

In my own State the policy was established of creating a public corporation. The State not being able to issue bonds, or go into debt, or function in a private capacity, it organized what was known as a public corporation, the directors of which are the supervisory authorities over our banks and, as I recall, the State treasurer.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Are none of these deposits insured by surety companies?

Mr. BLAINE. The surety companies entirely withdrew from the field, so there was no available security for public funds unless per chance some good citizens who had sufficient property to list would go upon the bonds, which of course the Senator will appreciate was an utter impossibility.

Mr. COUZENS. Did any of the banks put up with the State treasurer any securities they had to guarantee the deposits?

Mr. BLAINE. I would assume that wherever what I have referred to has occurred, they did not, because it was wholly inconceivable that a State would permit public funds to be preferred over the funds of general depositors. That would, I think, not be sound public policy.

Mr. COUZENS. But that has not been done in all cases, because I know of cases where banks have taken collateral out of their portfolios to insure the State treasury against any loss of public money.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will admit that it is scarcely fair treatment to the citizens of the State.

Mr. COUZENS. I agree, but it was quite prevalent when there was no alarm about any depositors, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BLAINE. It might have been done. In my State this public corporation was created, and it receives 2 per cent of the daily balances on all public funds. That goes into a fund out of which may be paid the public funds in closed banks.

The purpose of my amendment is to permit a public corporation organized, as I have indicated, owned and operated by the State, to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to meet the necessities of providing public funds with which to pay the going expenses of the several localities, towns, cities, vilages, counties, and school-district treasuries.

The amendment proposes that this corporation shall assign all dividends that are collected in the liquidation of the closed banks, or assign that portion of the funds from the liquidation of the banks as might otherwise go to the State.

We all appreciate that in most cases the receiver declares dividends and a distributive share, usually never less than 40 per cent, and oftentimes as high as 75 to 80 per cent. The right to that dividend, or the right to that distributive share, is to be assigned by the corporation obtaining the loan. In addition thereto, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may require the corporation to pay a portion of the assessments or premiums that are collected from the bank holding public funds.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the first instance held that insurance companies did not include surety companies, but afterwards reversed its position, and to-day is lending the surety companies of the country large sums of money. In one instance, the National Surety Co. has obtained a loan of $10,000,000. Those are the companies which ought to come to the rescue of these banks which are holding public deposits, but they decline to do so, and yet the Government of the United States is financing those very surety companies which ought to be assuring these funds.

The amendment I have offered simply proposes to put the States which may organize these corporations on a parity with the national surety companies which are failing in their duty and responsibility toward the public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York to turn to his amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. Which one?

Mr. COUZENS. Not the substitute, but the amendment which I understand was offered yesterday.

Mr. WAGNER. I have it.

Mr. COUZENS. Referring to page 3, subsection (d), the amendment reads:

(d) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to bona fide institutions, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for their undertakings, for the purpose of enabling them to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of agricultural commodities and livestock produced in the United States, and the products manufactured directly therefrom.

Does the Senator understand that by any provision in the act these loans are to be secured?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes, because there is a general provision in the law that all loans which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can make must be adequately secured. That applies to all loans.

Mr. COUZENS. But not to self-liquidating projects?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes, they have to be secured.

Mr. COUZENS. By what?

Mr. WAGNER. By whatever security they may demand. It may be by the particular charge upon the project, the tolls or fees or whatever it may be, which may be required as sufficient to amortize the loan. But in addition to that they take the security of the particular public body which makes the loan. A municipality gives its bonds. The public corporation gives its bonds. The State gives its bonds. The loans are secured by the bonds of the particular corporation or political subdivision, in addition to an agreement for the collection of tolls, speaking now of self-liquidating projects.

I can assure the Senator that all loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can be made only upon adequate security. If there is any doubt about it, let us add the particular words in this particular section. It will be tautology, but I have no objection.

Mr. COUZENS. Then I move to amend at the end of line 4, page 4, by adding the words "if adequately secured."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to wait a moment to see if the amendment is in the proper place? I think it would be better to insert it after the word "loans," so it would read:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, if adequately secured, to bona fide institutions—

And so forth. Would not that cover it?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which my other amendment was just agreed to may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COUZENS. I withdraw the amendment and offer it at the place suggested by the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "loans," insert the words "if adequately secured," so as to read:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, if adequately secured, to bona fide institutions—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from New York a question. Under the provisions of his amendment, where loans are made to private corporations to carry out the construction, replacement, or improvement of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks—and I understand there is added an amendment by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] including canals and markets, I ask the Senator if in his opinion the bill requires adequate security?

Mr. WAGNER. Absolutely. We do not change that at all. The Senator may take my word for it. Of course, it must be both self-liquidating and adequately secured.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not want any misunderstanding to arise. The value of this debate is that it will determine in part, I think, how the Reconstruction Finance Corporation interprets the act.

Now, I invite the Senator's attention to page 4 of his amendment, line 15.

Provided further, That each loan made under paragraphs (1) to (5) of subsection (a) of this section after this subsection, as amended, takes effect, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent more than the rate of interest established for the last issue of bonds of the United States preceding the making of such loan.

Does the Senator mean that to be interpreted that the loans now being made for five years, the last one being at the rate of 2⅝ per cent——

Mr. WAGNER. Three per cent was the rate on the last issue of Government bonds.

Mr. COUZENS. In other words, if the Federal Government shall be able to sell a 10-year bond for 1½ or 2 per cent, then in that event the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may charge only one-half of 1 per cent above that rate?

Mr. WAGNER. That would be the interpretation, except that there are no 10-year bonds issued that I know of. They are either short-term certificates extending not over a year or they are bonds beyond 20 years.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand.

Mr. WAGNER. I assume the Government would not change its fiscal policy to the point of issuing a 10-year bond.

Mr. COUZENS. We issued 5-year bonds just a short while ago at 2⅝ per cent. The Senator would not construe a note to be a bond?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; that is specified in the law. The term "bond" has a very definite meaning. A short-term certificate or note has a very definite meaning.

Mr. COUZENS. There are bills pending now before the Banking and Currency Committee to refinance farm mortgages at the rate of 1½ per cent, 2 per cent, and 3 per cent.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and 4 per cent.

Mr. COUZENS. Assuming that the Congress refinances all farm mortgages by issuing 50-year bonds at 1½ per cent, does the Senator mean by his provision that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may not charge more than one-half per cent above that rate?

Mr. WAGNER. If the Federal Government can get $50,000,000 on 20-year bonds at 1½ per cent?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what it would mean, but such a thing is inconceivable.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not so sure. In other words, there are proposals before the Congress now—and I want to make it perfectly clear that we may not have any misunderstanding—to sell the bonds, to issue 50-year bonds at 1½ and 2 per cent per annum and take up all of the farm mortgages. In all probability the owners of the farm mortgages would be glad to take 2 per cent Government bonds running for 50 years. I want to know if the Senator believes, if that took place, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would have to lend this money to projects at 2 and 2½ per cent.

Mr. WAGNER. That would not be a bond issue as covered by this provision of the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to make it plain for the RECORD just what is intended.

Mr. WAGNER. I am ready to cooperate to make it as plain as we can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York as amended.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I was temporarily called from the Chamber. What is the status of the amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. May I say to the Senator that I withdrew my amendment relating to taxation and said I would propose something else that would be more definite.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have in the course of preparation an amendment to take care of the situation to which I adverted. I dare say there will be no objection to it. It will be ready in just a minute or two. Will the Senator from New York be good enough to defer action for a moment?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In that situation, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Couzens | Kendrick | Schuyler |
| Austin | Cutting | Keyes | Sheppard |
| Bailey | Dale | King | Shipstead |
| Bankhead | Davis | La Follette | Shortridge |

| Coolidge | Hull | Robinson, Ark. | Watson |
| Copeland | Johnson | Robinson, Ind. | White |
| Costigan | Kean | Russell | |

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield for a moment in order that I may submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday, and that at 4 o'clock in the afternoon the Senate proceed to vote upon the pending bill and all amendments and motions that may be offered thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, before such an agreement could be entered into, the roll would have to be called.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the Senator make the hour not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. Very well, I will make the hour not later than 4 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the roll may be waived, inasmuch as a roll call has just been had.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to waiving the call of the roll? The Chair hears none. Now, is there objection to the request for unanimous consent preferred by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that he make the hour 4.30 instead of 4?

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to such a modification, and will make the hour 4.30.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent as modified?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like some reasonable assurance that, after the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] shall have concluded, if he proceeds on Monday, as I expect him to do, I shall have an opportunity to take the floor. In other words, without asking undue consideration, I hope under such an agreement not to be excluded from an opportunity to speak on the pending measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that, following the address of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] may be permitted to take the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Now, is there objection to the request for unanimous consent, as modified, submitted by the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McNARY. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he desires to go further or will he permit a recess at this time?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have an amendment to offer to the pending amendment of the Senator from New York, which will take only a moment or two.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was only going to suggest that I sincerely hope all amendments to the pending amendment may be offered and disposed of this evening, so that the issue before the Senate on Monday will be between the pending bill, as amended, and the substitute which I understand the Senator from New York intends to offer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I propose the following amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York: On page 2, line 3 of that amendment, I move to insert the following:

SEC. —. Nothing in subsection (a) of section 201 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 shall be held to render ineligible to purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures issued by any State or commission or other agency thereof secured by the pledge of receipts from taxes or other impositions upon or derived from the sale of gasoline, the avails of the sale of such debentures to be devoted exclusively to the improvement of the highways of such State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I understand that amendment relates only to highways?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is all.

Mr. COUZENS. In other words, it does not run counter in any sense to the objection that I raised to the inclusion in the bill of city halls, convention halls, libraries, art museums, and structures of that character which may be, in part, paid by fees but in most part are paid by taxes?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It does not cover anything of that kind.

Mr. COUZENS. I still have my objection to the elimination of the words proposed to be eliminated in section 23; but I have no objection, of course, to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Minnesota offers the following amendment to be inserted at the proper place as a new section:

SEC. —. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $25,000,000, under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as amended, to any public or private hospital organized under the laws of any State upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations as are applicable in the case of loans to financial institutions specified in section 5 of such act, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I inquire what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it seems to me that some explanation of the amendment ought to be made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will be glad to make an explanation.

Mr. President, it has come to my attention from various parts of the country that many hospitals are being closed for lack of credit facilities. The adoption of this amendment would make it possible for them to borrow money on the same terms as other institutions which are willing to put up security. I think that under existing economic conditions the last institution that ought to be closed is the hospital. At the request of the National Hospital Association, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In the absence of the Senator from the Chamber, a colloquy took place between the Senator from New York and myself with reference to a somewhat similar proposal. I asked him if the committee had given consideration to the idea of making it possible for loans to be extended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to educational, charitable, and religious institutions. He said that that matter had been discussed; that the attitude of the committee was unfavorable, inasmuch as they did not want to depart from the policy of loaning to self-liquidating projects. I pointed out that in a measure educational institutions are self-liquidating, especially so far as dormitories are concerned, where revenue is derived from the renting of rooms. I also pointed out a condition to which the Senator has referred, namely, the difficulty religious and charitable institutions have had in raising money. The Senator from New York, however, thought it would be opening the door pretty wide and that it would be a mistake to enter that field. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Minnesota will be able to explain his amendment so as to change the attitude of the Senator from New York.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Do I understand that the Senator intends by this amendment to permit publicly owned hospitals to apply for a loan without any State supervision of the loan or the consent or the approval of the mayor or the governor of the State in which the hospital is located?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I assume that the application would go through the official channels. If the city council should control a hospital, it could borrow for hospital purposes through the city administration.

Mr. COUZENS. May I point out to the Senator that in the substitute proposed by the Senator from New York the amount which may be loaned to the States and political subdivisions for the care of the unemployed and distressed has been increased from $300,000,000 to $600,000,000, and there is no provision in the measure, so far as I can see, which would prevent publicly owned hospitals from getting money through that source.

I want further to ask the Senator if, in his judgment, loans made to private hospitals would be able to be secured as is required under section 5 of the original act?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If such hospitals can not comply with the provisions that are required of all others, of course, they could not borrow money. The amendment specifies that they shall be permitted to borrow under such terms as are provided in section 5 of the original act.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand that, but I did not want to hold out any false hope to the hospitals, which have been conducting a very vigorous campaign, that under this amendment they could come in and get money without any security.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; I do not want to do that, either. If the Senator from Michigan and the Senate feel that the provisions already adopted for cities and States provide for the loaning of money to help public hospitals, of course, this amendment would be unnecessary as to public hospitals, and I might strike out reference to such hospitals.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am not quite clear as to the intention of the Senator or the meaning of the amendment which he has offered. Does the Senator intend by this amendment that money may be loaned to private organizations and corporations that are maintaining hospitals?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; provided they give sufficient security as required by the original act. Certainly they could not do it unless they complied with the provisions of the act. Like any other institution, they would have to put up security. If they have not it, they just can not get the money. I assume they can not get it, because that is the intention of the law.

Mr. KING. I thought the Senator, in his colloquy with the Senator from Michigan, indicated that the intention of this amendment was to deal with hospitals that were maintained by and perhaps were the property of municipalities; and therefore that a city, if it got a loan, might apply that loan for feeding the hungry and for caring for those who might be in the hospitals. It seems to me the authority in the bill would permit that; but I confess that if we open the door for every eleemosynary institution or every hospital in the United States operated and owned by private corporations to come here and borrow money we are going to be flooded with applications, and we are going to open the way for other invasions of the fund that will be created, and finally the fund will be exhausted, and the whole system is going to break down.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the funds are going to be exhausted and the whole system is going to break down anyway. This is the most insane piece of legislation that has ever been proposed in any form in any legislative body in the history of this country, and I say that of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act from the beginning. I am trying, out of this mess, to take care of some people who are sick and can not now be taken care of in hospitals. Out of these billions that we are spending, I am trying to get $25,000,000 on the same terms as others get them. I think we will get back as high a percentage of this money as we will in the case of any of the others. I think we are driving this country into bankruptcy with our Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I thought in this mess of insanity we could have one bright spot for humanity.

Mr. KING and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield, and to whom?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield first to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator before he takes his seat that I in part agree with his strictures upon the policy which we have pursued and are now pursuing. I think we are going to break down the credit of our country if we continue this policy. I think we ought, so far as possible, to confine our loans to those organizations that will furnish work to the unemployed.

I am willing to vote for loans that will furnish employment; but when we are embarking upon speculative ventures and loaning money for what are really speculative activities, such as many of them are, loaning large sums to railroads and other organizations and getting collateral that is shrinking in value—pretty soon we shall have left upon our hands hundreds of millions of collateral that is valueless—we are pursuing a course that, if we do not pause and interrupt it, is going to lead us into ruin.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In just a moment.

Mr. President, under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act we are taking the money, the credit of the Government, to pay interest on railroad bonds, interest on mortgages that have been piling one on top of the other for the last 50 years, without one cent of amortization—without amortizing one cent in 50 years. Under these conditions these mortgages and the interest on them can not be paid. We are using the Federal credit to do it, and it is only a question of time when we will have "busted" the Federal credit. Then we will be at the end of the rope; and we are simply postponing the inevitable day of reckoning. Under the policies that we have pursued in the last 15 years, we have "busted" the private credit system, and now we are "busting" the Government credit system. The whole system depends upon credit, and we are destroying the foundation of it. We are going to have a great many people who are sick, who can not be taken care of; and I thought that out of all this we might get $25,000,000 to loan to these institutions which can not operate, because of the "busted" credit system, to take care of the sick.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am interested to know how this amendment, if it is adopted, is going to work. If we eliminate the word "public" on the theory that those institutions can be taken care of now, under the language of the act, without this amendment, then we limit the amendment to private hospitals. The private hospital, of course, is operating for profit. To be sure, many of them are not making any profit; but they were not organized as charitable, eleemosynary institutions.

Would it be possible for a private hospital to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to enable it to operate and pay its expenses in lieu of the collection of fees and charges otherwise assessed upon the patients who were operated upon, or who, for any other reason were treated in the hospital? Would that be possible?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If they could repay the loan out of charges?

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, aside from that, of course if the "bright spot" which the Senator has in mind is to earmark $25,000,000 of this money for the purpose of looking after the sick, there ought not to be any requirement that it shall be paid back. There ought not to be any requirement that the hospital give security. If it is a charitable gesture, then we ought not to be hard-boiled about it. We ought to give it to them; and if any such amendment as this should be adopted, even with the requirement that they give security for the repayment of the money, I am wondering if it might become a practice of these private hospitals to take in everybody as patients, to keep their hospitals full all the time, and then collect the fees out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation fund, or out of this $25,000,000. If we are going that far in order to use the Government's funds to treat sickness, then why not use them to pay doctors' bills? Why require people to go to hospitals to get the benefit of the funds? If they can not pay the doctor, why not let the doctor borrow the money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in lieu of the fees he would charge his patients?

I am wondering, in all seriousness, just how far this theory would carry us in the elimination of losses on the part of anybody who is engaged in the practice of medicine or in conducting hospitals.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. This is not for the purpose of eliminating any loss. This is not for the purpose of loaning money or giving money. It is not a gift. It is to loan money under the terms of the original act where the hospitals can put up security like other borrowers under the act. If they have not the security they can not comply with the provisions of the act, and therefore can not borrow money.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we are going to appropriate this money for the benefit of hospitals already in existence, why not enlarge it and say that where there is no hospital the persons wishing to do so can come here and get the money to build one, if the Government is going to put the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into the hospital business?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We are putting the Government into every other business. This is to enable the hospitals to keep open and take care of the sick, if they have security to put up to get the money to permit them to operate.

Mr. BARKLEY. What sort of security has the average hospital, that can not pay its way now, to put up with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan? They do not, as a rule, have any bonds. If they do, they ought to sell them rather than come here and borrow money. If they have any security in the way of stocks or bonds which they could put up with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as security for a loan, that is an indication that they are not in such hard straits.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is true of any organization borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The same thing might be said of the airplane factories.

This is not a question of sympathy. This bill from its origin has been heralded as an economically sound proposition to loan money on adequate security. Some element of sympathy was injected into it when we permitted Government credit to be used to pay interest on bonds. If we have so much sympathy for the bondholder, whose security I do not consider a bit better than that of a private hospital will be, why can we not have some sympathy for the sick?

These loans can not be made to many of these other institutions on any other basis than sympathy. Certainly there is nothing in many of these loans that has anything to do with adequate collateral; but I am willing to go so far that if hospitals have not sufficient collateral, I would not loan the money to them. If I were a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and if these hospitals could not furnish better collateral than these railroad companies, I would not let them have the money.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if that is to be the criterion, the result would be that the hospitals that would be best able to operate independently would be the hospitals that would get this money. If they had acceptable security to come here and put it on the table and get $25,000,000, or any portion of it, based on that security, then those that are least able to operate, those that will close the soonest, those that have no collateral at all, will never get any money; and they may be the ones that need it most.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is true also of banks, and we let them close. When they borrow enough money so that they can pay their correspondents, we let them close.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of sickness and health does not always enter into it, although of course the closing of a bank has a tendency on a whole to make people ill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; and therefore we ought to make provision for hospitals to keep open, so that they can be taken care of.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to inquire, first, whether the Senator's indignation at the futility of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid in recovery has application to the effort here to provide a public works program by which men could be employed. I do not think the Senator is opposed to that kind of a program.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will say that my sympathy for people out of work makes me very reluctant to criticize the program of the Senator from New York but so far as it is an aid to recovery, I should say that it is to make death more easy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired. The Senator has 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, of course I sympathize with the efforts of the Senator from Minnesota and his desire to help these particular institutions. The bill, if passed, will permit the making of loans to build public hospitals. What the Senator desires to do is to make these funds available also to build private hospitals which are operated only for profit.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, no; not to build them—to operate them; to operate hospitals already in existence.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but it is confined to private hospitals.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am willing to have "public hospitals" stricken out, because I am informed that under another provision of the bill public hospitals can be taken care of.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. What I wanted to say was that we have avoided extending the provisions of this bill so as to include private enterprises, except certain specified ones devoted to public use, which were included in the bill of last year. If the Senator's amendment prevails, there is not any reason why educational institutions, eleemosynary institutions, and other types of private enterprises may not be included, too.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator's proposition is not one seeking to promote employment. It is one that seeks to permit the loaning of Federal funds for carrying on an existing undertaking, for operating these hospitals.

Is there any provision in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as now constituted, that moves in that direction?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; there is no such provision.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So that this would open the door for the first time to assuming, on the part of the Federal Government, the obligation of advancing from time to time the necessary funds to keep a public or a private institution in operation.

Mr. WAGNER. It undoubtedly would be exploring an entirely new field, namely, lending public money for the operation of private institutions.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The proposition about which I inquired was in the nature of a movement to increase employment by permitting educational and hospital associations, and religious institutions, to build plants which they desire to build now but for which they can not get money. The Senator thought that would be going pretty far, and I was inclined to agree with him. But this is a proposal to go into the business of maintaining, of carrying on, of operating, of advancing from time to time, these various institutions.

Mr. WAGNER. Municipalities have appealed to us to amend the bill so as to permit the borrowing of money for the operation of purely municipal affairs, because of the taxation situation in the communities, but the committee and the Senate, of course, have not seen fit to go as far as that. The Senator's proposal goes even beyond that and asks us to advance funds for the operation of private enterprises.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I would like to ask the Senator whether he does not believe that, under the liberal interpretation of the provisions of the act, it would not also be possible to consider the operation of a hospital as an employment institution? If a hospital closed for lack of credit, of course, the people working in the hospital would be put out of employment.

Mr. WAGNER. I am for liberal construction, but I could not go as far as that with the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in my opinion, has gone far beyond that. I would like to ask the Senator another question. Does the Senator think that the ownership of a railroad bond could be classed as a public concern or as a private concern?

Mr. WAGNER. I am not dealing with railroads or banks in my legislation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am talking about the provisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. If the Federal credit is employed in order to raise money to pay interest which I or some one else may have coming to me on a railroad bond, how can that be done in the name of giving employment?

Mr. WAGNER. It never was, as I understand it, done in the name of giving employment; and I had no share in formulating that particular program, so the Senator need not look at me as if I were responsible for that particular public venture.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As I understand it, the Senator's bill was offered as an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but it deals purely with the employment situation; is an effort to put people back to work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have heard an expression from many that this matter should go over until Monday, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, did the Senator address himself to me?

Mr. McNARY. No. The Chair had stated the question, and was about to ask for a vote, and in view of a number of Senators stating to me that they would like to be present when this matter was voted upon; and in view of the fact that earlier in the day we entered into a unanimous-consent agreement about taking a recess at the conclusion of business to-day, I suggest that we should take a recess now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before the Senator moves for a recess, I would like to obtain recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has to-day released a valuable bit of information. It sets forth the amount of money loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation up to and including the close of business on February 15. It sets forth a list of the States which have borrowed money under subdivision (c) of section 1. It also sets forth the amounts of money borrowed under subsection (e) of section 1 of the act.

I find, in reviewing the table, which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD, that every State in the Union has borrowed money except Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Wyoming. The table also shows that subdivisions have borrowed money in the States of Illinois, Michigan, North Dakota, Ohio, and Washington.

I ask that the table be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

III. UNDER SECTION 1 OF THE EMERGENCY RELIEF AND CONSTRUCTION ACT

Up to the close of business on February 15 the corporation had made $169,458,948.22 available to 39 States and 2 Territories for relief purposes, and of that amount $144,744,097.22 had been disbursed in cash as of that date.

Advances for relief purposes are authorized under two subsections of section 1. Advances authorized under subsection (c) are to be repaid to the Federal Government by deductions from future Federal contributions to States to aid in constructing roads. Under that subsection advances totaling $150,063,667.22 had been authorized. Advances under subsection (e) are made to political subdivisions of States and are to be repaid by the subdivisions. Under that subsection $19,395,281 had been authorized to be advanced. The following table shows the amount made available to States under both subsections as of February 15:

| State | Subsection (c) | Subsection (e) | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| Alabama | $1,753,631.00 | | $1,753,631.00 |

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I have the attention of the Senator from New York for a moment?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In what I said in the general discussion of the policy of extending Government credit under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act I would like to have the RECORD show that I was not addressing myself specifically to the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from New York. I referred to the general policy which has been pursued ever since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law was enacted by the Congress.

Mr. WAGNER. I was sure the Senator did not mean to criticize the efforts involved in the attempt to get through this legislation.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until Monday, February 20, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we pray in the name of Him who is the supreme example of human life. O let the magnet of His holy cross hang high and may its invisible power sweep through the waywardness, folly, and fury of this present day. May we soon hail the hour in which we shall see better things in the social and industrial orders and man to man shall brother be. Forgive our unbelief and our indifference and turn all hearts to Thee. The trust that has been conferred upon us is the greatest honor in the land. The Lord God forbid that our zeal should slacken, our faith get weak, or our love grow cold. May we take anew our bearings and carry ourselves as the sons of God. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred without amendment in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 49. Concurrent resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House in the enrollment of the bill, H. R. 7522, to omit Senate amendments numbered 15 to 23, inclusive.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5659. An act authorizing the State of Georgia to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Savannah River at or near Lincolnton, Ga.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 567. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. certain tracts of land situate in the county of Harford and State of Maryland; and

S. 1705. An act for the relief of Samuel C. Davis.

C. M. WILLIAMSON ET AL

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK], chairman of the Committee on Claims, may be permitted to file a supplemental report on the bill (S. 458) for the relief of C. M.

Williamson, Mrs. Tura Liljenquist, administratrix of C. E. Liljenquist, deceased, Lottie Redman, and H. N. Smith, on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman a question. The Senate has put in this bill $22,000,000 to put 88,000 17-year-old boys into an Army camp during peace time for a year. Is the gentleman going to agree to this ridiculous amendment?

Mr. COLLINS. I have been advised that the hospitalization cost, plus the Veterans Bureau benefits, which would result from such action, would probably cost in 10 years' time, $100,000,000 annually.

Mr. BLANTON. And it would absolutely ruin 88,000 American boys.

Mr. COLLINS. It would do the Army irreparable harm.

Mr. BLANTON. If you put this number of 17-year-old boys in an Army camp in peace time for a year, it would demoralize these boys, fix bad habits upon many of them, and they would not be worth a continental after they came out.

Mr. COLLINS. The addition of $22,000,000 to the War Department appropriation bill for Citizens' Military Training Camps for one year for upwards of 88,000 boys between the ages of 15 and 21, now roaming the country without jobs, seems incredible to thinking people. Of course, no such number can be accommodated; but for advertising purposes the number must be made large.

The bill carried $2,500,000 for this activity providing for 37,500 boys for one month. The War Department estimated that the cost of training each boy will be $1 per day, not including free issues. Every one who is familiar with the costs of administration in the War Department is bound to know that the number to be trained for one year with the $22,000,000 added in the Senate will be very much smaller than the country has been led to believe. It can not therefore, approximate 88,000.

There is no good reason why transient boys should be preferred over any other class of individuals who may be hard pressed. I question whether all of these boys now tramping the roads are hard pressed anyway. Doubtless some of them are, but many of them are not. Therefore, if Congress is intent upon giving relief to transient boys, it is my opinion that the most costly method has been selected. It is generally known that a direct dole can be given to as many as eight persons for the amount necessary to keep one soldier in the Army. On this very question I quote the following from Liddell Hart, one of the world's leading military authorities:

> Unfortunately, one now hears the argument that the military need to replace man power by machine power must yield to the need of keeping soldiers in employment. The practical reply would seem to be that even the dole is but a fraction of what an infantry soldier costs the hard-pressed finances of the country. And all infantry beyond the proportion who can be provided with, and backed by, up-to-date armament, are militarily superfluous. They are, indeed, merely a present charge on and a potential pension increase of the national debt in case of war. (Army Journal, January, 1932, p. 239.)

From the standpoint of the training to be given to the boy himself it would be very much better if he were taught a vocation rather than be given the training necessary to qualify him for soldiering. If these men are to be permanently kept in the Army and expect to make soldiering their vocation, a different method of selection should be made; still it does not carry out the purpose of the proposal. The Couzens idea is to take them off the roads. The amendment, however, carries no such language; so in the administration of it the War Department will be governed solely by the statements of the applicants that they have been unemployed for six months, since this is the only qualification necessary for entrance. The probabilities are, therefore, that the boys who will be accepted will be largely from the homes of the country rather than from the roads of the country. The Army wants worth-while recruits, not the lawless or irresponsible type nor those with flat feet or other physical handicaps, and, unfortunately, many of this type are unemployed and roaming the highways.

If the Army accepts this responsibility, it will be upon the ground that they expect to have an additional number of reservists capable of fighting in the event of war. They have no disposition to want to train for reservists a lot of irresponsible and physically handicapped youths. Whatever the country may think to the contrary, the boys to be selected will not come from public highways of the country. Recruits for this new war activity will come from households fully capable of supporting their sons and providing for them. The boys will be without a job, as are most boys of this tender age, and therefore able to qualify.

They will know that in entering the citizens' military training camps they will not have to enlist or pledge support and allegiance to the country in the event of war or an emergency. The boys know that they can take this training, but if they do not like it they can leave it. Since there is no enlistment there can be but very little, if any, military authority over them.

It is much better for the Government, if it is intent upon work of this character, to expend this money in providing vocational education for these young men in training them to do the kind of work that they can do after the year's training period is over.

If the statements that have been made to the Congress by the War Department are true, I doubt if the Army can properly house these men. The Congress has appropriated millions for quarters for officers and enlisted men and still all responsible officers of the Quartermaster Corps contend that even now the quarters are inadequate and in bad repair, and more than $100,000,000 is necessary to give existing units of the Army proper living quarters. Certainly, if their statements are true, the living quarters in which these young men will be housed will be wholly uninhabitable and we may have the repetition of influenza conditions that existed during the war when large numbers of men were congregated in camps without previously providing proper sanitary safeguards and housing.

If the Couzens amendment is to care for unemployed, the money could be spent to very much better advantage by using it to repair buildings and arsenals that are now in a run-down condition. This would give employment to men who have no desire to take up the military as a vocation, but who nevertheless are equally entitled to the same generosity from their Government.

If the idea is to give relief to those who wish a military life, then it is infinitely better that it be given to the National Guard. More than 100,000 men could be added to the National Guard with this money. National Guard men are given 4 drills a month and 15 days at camp during the summer. The National Guard, too, is a real organization of soldiers. In addition to this these citizen soldiers would live at home with their own families and among their own friends, free from the dangers and influences that come from the congestion of large numbers in cantonments. Furthermore I doubt if a majority of the American people are willing as yet to concede that family life is a failure and should be destroyed by sincere but hysterical persons who imagine that barracks life is the ideal existence for the youth of our country.

The Couzens amendment, adding as it does $22,000,000 to the Army appropriation bill, makes the military activities of the War Department appropriation bill for 1934 cost about $27,000,000 more than the military activities of the appropriation bill for 1933, and, if measured by the purchasing power of the dollar, makes it the largest peace-time appropriation bill in the history of our country.

Moreover, these youths temporarily quartered with the Army will be in the same camps with military men more permanently attached to the Army. Hence arises the difficulty of attempting to handle one camp under two different sets of rules and regulations, one set requiring strict discipline, the other a relaxation of Army rules. The one group receives pay and thus has money to spend; the other receives no compensation and has none to spend. This condition is not conducive to good military discipline and also prevents any real harmony within the system. Worse still, it will probably result in the greatest discord between the Army and these transient boys. Both will demand all the privileges and perquisites that the other gets.

I believe I am stating a fact not unknown to the people of the country when I refer to conditions now as perhaps as bad as have ever existed in this country. I am not stating an unknown fact when I say that the costs of government are nearly $1,000,000,000 per year more than the taxes collected with which to support it. So in times like these I seriously doubt if the people of the country who take the time to think are willing to venture upon a wide-eyed scheme such as this one to supply a doubtful number of young men with the bare existence of life and congregate them in the very formative period of their young lives and away from their home influences.

Let us remember also there will be more than one pay day if we take these men into the Army even temporarily, especially if we bring in, as some believe we will, those roaming the roads of the country. Many of them will be diseased. Others will incur diseases and bodily injury when they are congregated, for they are young men in their teens. The hospitalization costs will demand additional funds. More hospitals, doctors, nurses, medicines, supplies of all kinds, as well as buildings and so forth, must be supplied. The funds will not be carried in the 1934 bill but will be reflected in future appropriations as the medical and other reserves will be depleted. In addition, it is idle for us to say we will not compensate these men for injuries or diseases incurred in or incident to service. Veterans' benefits must therefore increase, and in future years the increase will be enormous. It is my opinion—and I am not speaking without investigation—that if 88,000 men are taken into alleged citizens' military training camps for one year's time, as newspapers have estimated hospital costs and veterans' benefits will aggregate, within 10 years, $100,000,000 annually. The tax-paying public should know these facts.

A still better reason for the refusal of the Congress to appropriate this large sum of money is the fact that other countries of the world will charge, and correctly so, that we are increasing the size of our Regular Military Establishment by nearly 100,000 men. They will charge that it is a permanent addition. They know the present size of our Regular Army and the number of our reservists, because all the nations, including ours, make reports to the League of Nations. Foreign nations know, counting our reserves, that our Army is as large as any of them and that its cost is the largest. The increase by us of our Regular Establishment by this large number of men would in turn be followed by similar increases in the size of their military establishments.

Thus this country would be charged, and rightly so, with beginning another race in armaments, which folly is to a larger extent than any other responsible for present conditions. I doubt if under present world conditions we can afford now to do anything that would create any additional hostile feelings toward us on the part of other nations. It seems to me that we should be the first of the nations to bring about international good will rather than to commit acts designed to promote international discord and hatred.

The press of the country is critical of this relief evasion. Excellent editorials condemning the proposal have appeared in many of our leading daily papers, such as the New York Herald Tribune (February 16), the Baltimore Sun (February 16), and the Washington News (February 15).

The taxpayers will never relieve themselves of such extravagances unless they make themselves heard as these wide-awake newspapers have done. Under such circumstances, silence is not golden.

The editorial from the Washington News follows:

A $22,000,000 EVASION

After riding through almost an entire session of Congress in the worst depression of our history without even discussing direct relief for the hungry, the Senate has capped its evasion by giving the care of transient youth to the Army.

To the Army appropriation bill $22,000,000 was added for citizens' military training camps to accommodate 88,000 of the estimated 200,000 boys roaming the country without jobs. As a method of increasing the Army appropriation at a time of needed economy this method is very effective. But for solving a serious social problem it would be difficult to find a worse method.

Social workers and Government experts are agreed, and so stated during the recent hearings on the Cutting bill, that these transient youths should not be isolated in large concentration camps far from home. General Glassford, who has been traveling among these homeless boys to study conditions, recommended to the committee that civilian camps should not include more than 750 boys, and preferably 500. Grace Abbott, Chief of the United States Children's Bureau, pointed out that large Federal camps would "attract many who would otherwise stay at home," thus increasing rather than decreasing the problem. Social workers emphasized that these proposed large military camps would create the same serious difficulties which surrounded the Army cantonments during the war.

Just because our Army is efficient as an army it is not equipped to be a school and a home and a place of employment for young boys made tramps by the depression. Instead of pauperizing the boys by inviting them to remain in an Army camp for one year, as the Senate proposes, they should be handled in small units by trained workers intent on getting them back to their homes and to work as soon as possible.

This half-baked legislation is a sample of what happens when Congress ignores an explosive situation for many months and then suddenly pulls a cure-all out of its hat as a gesture between appropriation bills.

It is high time that this evasion of the vast relief problem is stopped. The first and immediate job of Congress is to provide quick relief through local agencies for the millions who are hungry and cold. The La Follette-Costigan and Wagner bills covering the many-sided relief needs are ready for action. But nothing is done.

Senator LA FOLLETTE has just warned the Senate that it must begin night sessions and that, rather than permit adjournment of Congress without action, he will force the issue. Senator LA FOLLETTE is too patient. He should force the issue to-day—every day more people go hungry, every night more people go cold.

A vote should be forced now in which every member of Congress is made to declare himself for feeding or for starving the unemployed.

[From the Baltimore Sun]

WANDERING BOYS

The concern which Senator COUZENS feels for the "wandering boys," who are reported from every section of the United States to be maintaining a precarious existence on the edge of vagrancy, is shared by everybody. Like him, every American citizen rebels at the thought that some 200,000 young men are roaming the highways able to say, "I have nowhere to go." The Senator's proposal to allow these homeless boys to find shelter in Army cantonments will receive sympathetic consideration throughout the country.

Before accepting it, however, Congress will do well to consider rather critically the multitudinous problems raised by the Couzens amendment to the Army appropriations bill. The first thing that will occur to most people is that the wandering boys, despite their pathetic appeal, are but a phase of the whole weight of human misery growing out of economic depression and unemployment. As was pointed out by Senator LA FOLLETTE, the whole problem of unemployment and relief awaits solution, and behind that, of course, is the problem of economic recovery itself. It would be a pity to rush through a proposal to deal, at great expense, with a mere fraction of the problem of relief without rather careful consideration as to how this scheme fits into the pattern as a whole.

The War Department has estimated the cost of maintaining these boys in Army camps at about $250 a year each. For the 88,000 boys estimated by Senator COUZENS as the number likely to avail themselves of this privilege, the annual cost would be around $22,000,000. If the number should prove to be 200,000, the cost would be $50,000,000. Obviously these are important sums to be appropriated for a purpose the essential wisdom of which is the least in doubt. And, as the debate in the Senate makes plain, there is considerable doubt, at least, upon a variety of problems which would be created by the addition of so large a number of these boarders to the Army's responsibilities.

Surely, before embarking upon a scheme of such import, the Senate will want to investigate the nature and background of this homeless army. From what homes do they come, and what local resources could be tapped for their support? It appears to be the opinion of social agencies that most of them are not orphans but the sons of families in which the breadwinner is unemployed. Many of them have fled from conditions of destitution, but it appears that many more have been driven from home by a commendable shame at the necessity of accepting support from fathers with small incomes. In Baltimore, for example, a boy in the family of an unemployed man would receive from the community fund an allowance of $1 a week for food. The estimated cost of maintaining him in an Army camp is five times as much. From the taxpayer's point of view it is clear enough that some effort should be made to take care of him in his own locality—even if no other doubts assailed us.

But, of course, other doubts arise at once, doubts as to employment, discipline, social conditions surrounding the camps, "militarization," psychological effect of such concentration, effect on Army discipline and a myriad of others. After all, if boys are wandering, their sisters must be in an equally deplorable state. To provide in this way for boys merely because they wander, while ignoring the plight of the rest of the family, hardly commends itself as more than a sketchy and fragmentary approach to the desperate problems growing out of our depressed economy. It is admitted to have the advantage of being possible for immediate application, but it can not take the place of action in the wider field of general relief and recovery.

This from the New York Herald Tribune:

RELIEF WITH THE CITIZENS' MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS

By abruptly voting the War Department an additional $22,000,000 wherewith to convert the citizens' military training camps into a form of depression relief, the Senate has presented something of a poser, both in depression relief and in military policy. One can not help being struck by the irony of a spending policy which first devotes months to scraping Army appropriations to the bone, and then, upon the magic words, "human misery," turns around and presents the Army with a sum which must appear to that harassed service as beyond the dreams of avarice. But let that pass; it is only another instance of those congressional confusions which are too familiar already.

The proposal itself may still be regarded with a certain caution. There is an obvious danger in establishing as a principle that any kind of Federal grant to the unemployed is all right if it can be made to appear as a form of relief to "human misery." As with so many other congressional attempts to kill two birds with one stone, it is too likely to end with millions of dollars expended and neither bird dead—with relief bestowed where it is not needed and with national defense weakened rather than strengthened. To say that the principle is dubious, however, is not enough to prove that a specific proposal is unjustified on its own merits.

In the present case the vagrant-youth problem is undoubtedly one which has been treated with more emotion than statistics. The estimate that there are 200,000 youths in a condition so serious as to demand immediate Federal rescue is open to considerable reservation, but there seems ample evidence that the highways and the byways are filled with these wandering youngsters who would be worth anchoring to some definite activity and some definite place in the national life. On the military side the proposal would abruptly remake the whole citizens' military training camp system and present the Regular Army with a trained reserve of 88,000 men—more than the full strength of the active Army within the United States. This would be a very considerable gift to the national defense.

Opinions differ as to the military value of the present citizen's military training camps, though it can not be very high, on the most generous estimate. Though they normally receive about 37,000 trainees a year, it is impossible to make these into soldiers in a month. A year's training is something of an altogether different character. Even though the 88,000 youths would not be regularly enlisted, they might well supply the Army with formations useful in its own scheme of training, and they should be admirable reserve material when the year was over. Moreover, if the United States Government is to support 88,000 youths for a year the least it could ask in return would seem to be that they should become a part of the regular reserve, as citizens' military training camp trainees are not now required to do. The point is that if Congress is going to spend $22,000,000 in such an enterprise it would be folly for it to do so purely as a charitable matter, without fitting the expanded camps into an intelligently adjusted military policy. This proposal would introduce an entirely new and important element into our Army structure, and properly to make use of it requires care and legislation.

And this from the Washington News:

It would be infinitely better to make $22,000,000 available to public educational institutions, which are qualified to give our wandering youth a practical vocational education that will enable them to be self-sustaining.

Few military instructors are schooled in the civil walks of life and they are unqualified to be entrusted with the complex social and educational problem presented by wandering boys. Not many of these boys will offer themselves for military discipline and practice at the hand of military authorities. But they would welcome an opportunity to obtain a practical education suitable to their talents.

Apparently the proposal is an excuse for increasing the military appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees:

Messrs. COLLINS, WRIGHT, PARKS, BARBOUR, and CLAGUE.

CLERICAL SERVICES IN ENROLLING ROOM

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts submitted at this time at each session for additional clerical services in the enrolling room.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 388

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives during the remainder of the present session not exceeding $200 for additional clerical services in the enrolling room.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. I know we do this, but why is it necessary?

Mr. WARREN. Because at the last of the session it is absolutely necessary to get the bills enrolled in time to be submitted to the President; and as the gentleman knows, there are a great many bills rushing in right at the very last minute.

Mr. SNELL. And you put on extra help?

Mr. WARREN. This has been the custom every session, I understand.

Mr. SNELL. As a general thing this session we have not had as many bills as we have usually put through in the short session.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the gentleman about that, but the Clerk informs me he thinks this is absolutely necessary; that he has been getting some extra help from the Government Printing Office, but on account of the economy act they will be unable to get compensation for it.

Mr. SNELL. I know we have done this, but I am wondering if this is absolutely necessary, in view of the fact that we are not passing as many bills as usual.

Mr. WARREN. I am so informed by the Clerk.

The resolution was agreed to.

MORRISTOWN NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, N. J.

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 384

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 14302, a bill to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committe on Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CALVIN COOLIDGE

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered by an attorney of my district, Mr. J. A. Nelson, of Decorah, Iowa, on Calvin Coolidge, in memory of our late former President, to the Decorah Chamber of Commerce, and a poem by Selmer Grovdahl, of Ossian, Iowa, which I feel are both expressive of the tender feelings of the good people for Calvin Coolidge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

[From the Decorah (Iowa) Public Opinion, February 2, 1933]

ADDRESS OF J. A. NELSON

The history of our country is a story of great men and great deeds. They constitute inspiring tales that never grow old. It is the résumé of our country's traditions which will ever live in prose and song. If we are conscious of this, we are also impressed by the unparalleled courage and the matchless deeds of the men who have made our history—even from the very beginning when the so-called Revolutionary patriots broke with the old order of things, especially in government, and ushered in the era of human freedom. The ideas then advanced and accepted, had for centuries been hidden like seeds in the breasts of men, but with fertile thoughts and true reason, burst forth and ripened into a new Republic, patterned from ideals hitherto unknown in practice, and only transiently experienced in the visions and dreams of men. It is inspiring indeed, to recall the characters who brought to a realization these great gifts, the men who have come out upon our national arena, and after performing some valuable service, departing from it, not infrequently lavishly enriching our Nation's lore.

With the passing of the years, our attention is called to the rich sprinkling of noble men, hailing from every part of our country, from every walk of life, from farm, town, and hamlet, who in spite of poverty and hardship and adversity, have seized opportunities, harnessed them and ridden to high places in the affairs of our Government. Our racial mixture has not retarded our political and social progress, but rather quickened it; brought it to a fuller realization of our national purpose and in giving due credit to these forces we are also impressed by those stern, serene, and dependable New England faces, hailing from that same stock, that have as a matter of second nature, or of duty, if you please, carried with them the idea of freedom, independence, and democracy, from generation to generation.

In this connection it is interesting to reflect on the life of Calvin Coolidge, especially in view of his recent demise. And, mind you, it is not his greatness but his inherent humility that commands our attention; not his power and splendor but his humane and continuing simplicity that causes us to pause and recount briefly the events of that life.

It is only about two weeks ago that just as Senator GLASS, of Virginia, was expounding his bank bill, his colleague, Senator SWANSON, nudged him and whispered that former President Coolidge had just dropped dead. Almost immediately—numb from the shock—the Senate adjourned.

At the White House President Hoover was lunching with Secretary of State Stimson. An usher tiptoed into the dining room, whispered into the President's ear that Coolidge had just passed away from heart failure. The President arose, walked with quick step to his office, and hastily dispatched a message to Congress, issuing a proclamation of 30 days for public mourning. Within a few minutes down came the White House flag and with it the flags of the Nation. They are still at half-mast. Within a few minutes the President's resolution reached the House of Representatives. It was read, "It is my painful duty to inform you of the death to-day of Calvin Coolidge. There is no need for me to recount his eminent service; his entire lifetime has been one of single devotion to his country." The House adjourned.

This was the official effect of the sad news. A duplicate of this event takes us back to the death of George Washington, in 1799, leaving the Nation now as it did then without a living ex-President.

Calvin Coolidge was born of Puritan stock in Plymouth, Vt., July 4, 1872. A grandfather of his grandfather was a captain in the Revolutionary army. The home was plain, surrounded by a picket fence, a few shade trees, and the customary lilac bush to give beauty and fragrance in springtime. His father had a little store and kept the post office. From different angles could be viewed collections of farm buildings. Over yonder was a hotel building with a dance hall—in front was a spacious corner known as a bar. It had been dormant for years. Calvin said that sometimes he would play ball instead of filling the wood box. For these and similar derelictions he would do penance.

Calvin Coolidge never forgot his old home and the dear ones there.

As to speaking of his mother, who died when he was 12, he says, "It is impossible for any man to adequately describe his mother. I can not describe mine. They laid her away in the blustering winds of March." In substance he uses the language of Lincoln when he continues, "The greatest grief that can come to a boy came to me. Life was never to seem the same again. It always seemed to me that the boy I lost was her image. They all rest together in the sheltered hillside among five generations of the Coolidge family."

He says many nice things about his father also. Words that have a special significance as, "The work he did endured." In this connection let us recall the hour of 2.47 in the morning on the 3d day of August, 1923, when father and son were seated at a plain table in the faint light of a kerosene lamp, then suddenly both arose and John Coolidge, the father, as a notary public and justice of the peace, administered to Calvin, his son, the oath that made him President of the United States.

In his boyhood days Calvin's dress was plain. A gingham shirt with overalls in the summer, and barefooted, which clothing was exchanged for woolen garments and cow-hide boots in winter. Mittens and stockings were knitted by his grandmother. He said, "I have some of them now."

His descriptions of the people who were his neighbors while a boy are exemplary. "Their speech was clean—their lives above reproach—credit was good—debts were paid—the money was saved." "The break of day saw them stirring" which "continued until twilight. They cherished the teachings of the Bible. The conduct of the young people was modest and respectful. During my boyhood I attended Sunday school superintended by Grandmother Coolidge until her advanced years when the place was taken by my father."

"There was no class distinction except toward those who assumed superior airs. They were held in contempt." The school he attended when 5 was built of stone, was unpainted, with desks wide enough for two. Here he mastered the common-school subjects.

Conscious of value of these surroundings, in a few words he alludes to it as a fine atmosphere in which to raise a boy; how clean it was; not "artificial," but close to nature and in accordance with nature. The streams ran clear; the people were clean. Even when I try to divest it of its "halo," he writes "I am unable to."

He is so taken up with it that he even speculates as to whether or not the country was the best place to bring up a boy, stating "I am prejudiced in behalf of the country. It would be hard to imagine better surroundings for a boy than those which I had. If I had the power to order my life anew, I would not dare change that period of it; it abundantly provided the best there was for me."

Delving earnestly into important details of his life, he suggests that "going away to school was his first great adventure." It was "breaking with the past and entering a new untried field, large and alluring." He says one of his first subjects was civil government, and describes the impression it left on his life: "This was my first introduction to the Constitution of the United States. Although I was but 13 years old, the subject interested me exceedingly. The study of it which I began has never ceased, and the more I study of it the more I have come to admire it, realizing that no other document devised by the hand of man ever brought so much progress and happiness to humanity. The good it has wrought can never be measured."

Coolidge could create a humorous atmosphere. Many episodes could be cited to prove this. A story from school days gives an insight that has a special interest. Says Coolidge: "Of course, our school life was not free from pranks. The property of the townspeople was moved to strange places in the night. One morning as the janitor was starting the furnace he heard a loud bray from one of the classrooms. His investigation disclosed the presence there of a domestic animal noted for his long ears and discordant voice. In some way during the night he had been stabled on the second floor. About as far as I deem it prudent to discuss my own connection with these escapades is to record that I was never convicted of any of them, and so must be presumed innocent."

He was endowed with literary talents, which were timely and fittingly used. He could express himself with brevity as he did in his summer camp in South Dakota when he came out with some narrow slips of paper on which were written "I do not choose to run." He could mass his ideas in masterly fashion when the occasion demanded it. The tribute he once paid to his academy teachers discloses this: "It was under their teaching that I first learned the glory and grandeur of the ancient civilization that grew up around the Mediterranean and in Mesopotamia. Under their guidance I beheld the marvels of old Babylon, I marched with the Ten Thousand of Xenophon, I witnessed the conflict around beleaguered Troy which doomed that proud city to pillage and to flames, I heard the tramp of the invincible legions of Rome, I saw the victorious galleys of the Eternal City carrying destruction to the Carthaginian shore, and I listened to the lofty eloquence of Cicero and the matchless imagery of Homer. They gave me a vision of the world when it was young and showed me how it grew. It seems to me that it is almost impossible for those who have not traveled that road to reach a very clear conception of what the world now means.

"It was in this period that I learned something of the thread of events that ran from the Euphrates and the Nile through Athens to the Tiber, and thence stretched on to the Seine and the Thames to be carried overseas to the James, the Charles, and the Hudson. I found that the English language was generously compounded with Greek and Latin, which it was necessary to know if I was to understand my native tongue. I discovered that our ideas of democracy came from the agora of Greece, and our ideas of liberty came from the forum of Rome. Something of the sequence of history was revealed to me, so that I began to understand the significance of our own times and our own country."

He was a philosopher who ever sought for the best in human nature. He stressed the fact in his autobiography, that "good influences had always come into his life."

"Perhaps," he says, "I have been more fortunate in this respect than others. I am not disposed to minimize evil; yet good predominates and is constantly about us, ready for our service if we only accept it. The spiritual nature of men has a power of its own that is manifest in every great emergency from Runnymede to Marston Moor, from the Declaration of Independence to the abolition of slavery.

"Our talents," he says, "are given us that we may serve ourselves and our fellow men. It is not industry but idleness that is degrading."

His public service is well known. Great deeds were not in his category; but his sublime, faithful, and upright service will enshrine his name with the good and the great.

His public life need only be centered about three incidents: (1) The Boston police strike, and how it was stopped; (2) his father administering the oath when he became President; (3) the sentence "I do not choose to run." To us these should portray his belief in self-government, his admiration of things worth while, and his unselfish devotion to his country. Anything added other than this is superfluous.

Calvin Coolidge, having finished his course, now rests from his labors. The example of his courage, the integrity and the purity of his life, while a priceless heritage to this Nation, is also a sacred and solemn benediction as we behold his silent passing to the great beyond. It seems almost, as we reverence his memory, that he was created specially to bring a new and wholesome atmosphere into our national life. And it is not unfitting, as we think of him, to shut out the world for a moment with its cares and calls, and unite in an affectionate reverence to his memory. He attracts our attention because by simple, unassuming, and faithful service he ascended step by step higher and higher, until he reached the very summit of American greatness.

His life shines out to-day from the granite hills of Vermont, where he rests on a hillside with generations of his forebears, as a noble example of one richly endowed with wholesome philosophies of life, with respect and admiration for law and order, with reverence for God, with affection for home and home folks, with a willingness to serve and sacrifice, and with an intense love of country so serious, so unique, so true, that it is destined to live on and inspire this generation and others to come to give more interest to public and private affairs, more respect to the nobility of toil, more attention to the sanctity of life.

His memory will live on with the Nation's great, adding another star to our Nation's hope, another sunrise to our Nation's day, another power to our Nation's might, another chapter to our Nation's history.

CALVIN COOLIDGE

By Selmer Grovdahl

He did not shout his wares from hilltops high, this silent one;
He calmly reasoned deeds have voices, too, when toil is done.
His boyhood days among New England's hills; each rocky slope
A grave and silent sermon heard by him of faith and hope.
On this foundation firm he builded dreams his life to share
In all its fullness; and the seeds thus sown did blossom fair.
When memories mellow with the pace of time, so confident
With reverence we'll tell, recall, and praise Cal Coolidge, President.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14643, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. PRALL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, debate on this item was concluded at the recess on Thursday and the vote comes immediately on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute to address the committee out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will permit, may I suggest that it is important that we finish this bill to-day. Unless we conclude consideration and dispose of the bill this afternoon it will seriously interfere with the legislative program of the coming week. For that reason I trust Members will stay within call of the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the pending amendment be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 2, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "Provided further, That the children of officers and men of the United States Army and Navy and the Marine Corps and the children of other employees of the United States stationed outside of the District of Columbia shall be admitted to public schools without payment of tuition."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit this inquiry. This amendment is only for the current appropriation bill?

Mr. CANNON. Only for the current appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Virginia) there were 21 ayes and 47 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Not to exceed $50,000 of the unexpended balance of appropriations for buildings and grounds, public schools, contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act, fiscal year 1932, is hereby made immediately available and shall continue available until June 30, 1934, for the improvement of grounds surrounding public-school buildings, constructed under appropriations for the fiscal year 1932 and prior fiscal years, such work to be performed by day labor or otherwise in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

For beginning the construction of a senior high school building at Forty-first and Chesapeake Streets NW., in the Reno section, $500,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building, at a cost not to exceed $1,000,000.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments which I desire to offer at this time, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes now, instead of five minutes each at different times.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DE PRIEST: Page 38, line 24, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$433,000."

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as both of these amendments are going to be discussed at one time, for the information of the House can we not have the other read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the other amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Second amendment offered by Mr. DE PRIEST: After line 2, page 39, insert the following paragraph:

"For purchase of land adjacent to Phelps Trade School on Vermont Avenue, $67,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it has been customary in the committee to divide the funds provided for buildings and grounds for schools in proportion to the school population of the District, white and colored, as nearly as possible. Since I have been in Congress, in 1930 the school population of the District, so far as the blacks are concerned, was 34.1, and the remainder white. The appropriation for that year for the colored schools was 29.4. In 1931 the population, colored, was 34.5, and the appropriation 31.1. In 1932 the school population, colored, was 34.6, and the appropriation 38.86; and in 1933 the school population, colored, was 34.9, and the appropriation 37.33. We have had, therefore, a fair distribution—some years a little over and some years a little under. For this year in the bill the appropriation is 26.01, while the school population now, colored, is 34.9.

The Bureau of the Budget, the Board of Education, and the District Commissioners made their recommendations this year to the committee that $67,000 be appropriated with which to purchase grounds around Phelps Trade School on Vermont Avenue. I am not trying to increase the appropriation. I am trying to hold it down to what it was originally, as recommended by this committee. Five hundred thousand is appropriated to build this new high school on Forty-first and Chesapeake Streets NW., with an authorization of $1,000,000. By reducing the $500,000 by $67,000 from this year's appropriation, it will not reduce the total cost of the school, but does reduce the total expenditure this year for that particular school. They have to draw the plans and let the contracts and start the work, and they will not need the $500,000 this year. It will mean an increase in the appropriation next year on that school from $500,000 to $567,000, up to a total of $1,000,000. I am asking an appropriation of $67,000 this year to buy this ground around Phelps Trade School, which is on Vermont Avenue, between T and U Streets, so as to provide room for additional buildings there next year. If that is not done, they will have to put up portables. I know the members of the committee wish to carry out the program as laid down by the Board of Education and the District Commissioners, and as recommended by the Budget Committee. They are trying to economize, and I am trying to help them. I do not wish to increase the total expenditure. I am simply taking it from one place and allocating it to another place, to the extent of $67,000. If that would interfere with the building of the high school that is authorized I would not do this, but I know and the members of the committee must know that they can not possibly use all of that $500,000 this year. I take this opportunity to ask the chairman of the committee, Mr. CANNON, if I am not correct in that the Budget Bureau did recommend this appropriation of $67,000 this year?

Mr. CANNON. That was recommended, yes; but with a number of other items. We cut it down, in proportion to the others.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I know that you are not attempting to discriminate.

Mr. CANNON. We made no distinction.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I am not making any distinction at all, but I am simply trying to economize. The neighborhood around Phelps Trade School is thickly settled, and they will have to have more rooms for that school shortly or put up portables which will be an additional expense, and in addition to that they will not last very long. I am asking that this appropriation be made at this time, and I am going to ask my friends on the opposite side of the aisle to support the amendment. It will not interfere with the total amount of the appropriation which is about $865,000 for buildings and grounds this year. I think it would be economical to allocate $67,000 from the $500,000 for that other school and make this purchase at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, so far as the first amendment is concerned, the committee is glad to accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second amendment offered by Mr. DE PRIEST: After line 2, page 39, insert the following: "For purchase of land adjacent to the Phelps Trade School on Vermont Avenue, $67,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw the reservation of the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the gentleman from Texas present. In his absence, I would have to oppose this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia) there were ayes 50 and noes 58.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. CANNON and Mr. DE PRIEST to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 71 and noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or obligated toward the construction of or addition to any building the whole and entire construction of which, exclusive of heating, lighting, plumbing, painting, and treatment of grounds, shall not have been awarded in one or a single contract, separate and apart from any other contract, project, or undertaking, to the lowest responsible bidder complying with all the legal requirements as to a deposit of money or the execution of a bond, or both, for the faithful performance of the contract: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as repealing existing law giving the commissioners the right to reject all bids.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOLADAY: Page 39, line 20, after the end of line 20, insert "For the purchase of school building and playground sites as follows: For the purchase of additional land for a site for the Jefferson Junior High School, to be immediately available, $110,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $75,000 provided for such a site in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, two years ago the Congress appropriated $201,000 to purchase a site for the relocation of the Jefferson High School in southwest Washington. The commissioners proceeded to secure the site. They bought part of it and paid $126,000. They started condemnation proceedings to secure the remainder of the proposed site. That proceeded to trial, and a verdict was returned which was satisfactory to the commissioners. The owner of the property filed a petition for a new trial, which was allowed, and the case then proceeded to another hearing. The jury returned a verdict fixing an award at $294,000, which in the opinion of the commissioners was entirely beyond what the property was worth. They thereupon went into court and attempted to dismiss the condemnation proceedings. The owner objected to that, and that question is now pending in court, as to whether or not the condemnation proceedings can be dismissed.

In the meantime, during the two years that this suit was pending, the Congress last year appropriated $200,000 to commence the building. Within the last few weeks the commissioners have compromised with the owner, whereby they are to pay him $185,000, which is $109,000 below the value fixed by the jury. This amendment proposes to take $126,000, which is available from the original appropriation of $201,000, and add $75,000, which will give the commissioners sufficient funds to complete the purchase. If this amount is not allowed in the bill it means that the District will be unable to proceed with the building. We now own one-half of the site.

There is the further question which is pending in court. There is the possibility that the District may lose and the judgment for $294,000 will stand. That is a matter that is pending in court. Under the compromise, the judgment is cut $109,000, and will admit of the commissioners proceeding with the erection of the school.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] we will add another $185,000 to this bill. Do you want to waste $185,000? The gentleman, as we told you last week when he was offering these stacks of amendments, is a member of the subcommittee which held hearings on this bill. Not one single time in that subcommittee did the gentleman ever rise and offer such an amendment as he has offered on this floor.

Mr. HASTINGS. Was it offered by anyone else?

Mr. BLANTON. No; not by anyone else. His collaborator, in trying to take money out of the Treasury, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] who, until this Congress, has always been for economy, saw fit to file a minority report on this bill. But our friend from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] did not file any minority report. He did not object to the action of his committee. This bill was carefully written and worked out by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. It is a good bill. It is economical. It is in accordance with the wishes of all the various chambers of commerce of the United States who are demanding that expenses be cut.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman say that this item was not brought to the attention of the subcommittee and was not considered by the subcommittee at all?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we considered it, but we turned it down, and I am saying there never was an attempt on the part of our friend from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] to put this item in the bill.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry. The gentleman has had his five minutes and I want mine.

I want to ask you Republican colleagues across the aisle why is it that you are backing up the gentleman from Illinois on all these expensive amendments? The last time we considered this bill, day before yesterday, you gave the gentleman almost a solid Republican vote on every amendment he offered. He had an amendment to raise one item $100,000. You passed through the tellers and gave him almost solid support. Why are you doing it? I wish those business men who are sending letters here this morning, many of which I have received, demanding retrenchment, would center their fire on the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] and convince him that economy ought to prevail in this Chamber and that due retrenchments must be made.

If we are not going to retrench in this session, just when are we to begin? Just how much bigger deficit must there be in the Treasury before you are willing to cut down expenditures? If the few of us here who are fighting daily to retrench and cut down appropriations are not given your support and vote, it will be impossible to retrench.

Are not you willing to help save $185,000? That is what you will save by defeating this amendment? Is not $185,000 worth saving? Consult with your constituents back home and they will tell you that they consider $185,000 quite a sum of money, and that they can not afford to have that sum wasted, when it comes out of the people's pockets in burdensome taxation.

The question is are we going to back up the chairman and the committee on the bill, or are we going to let the gentleman from Illinois waste the time of the Congress and offer and pass his $185,000 amendments galore and keep this bill from passing to-day?

The gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of this committee [Mr. CANNON], has the assurance from the Speaker that he can hold this House together to-day until it passes this bill, even if we have to be in session to-night. Do you want to stay here to-night and have a night session to let the gentleman from Illinois offer all these frivolous amendments, to add these $185,000 items to this bill, or do you intend to help us vote down such amendments and let us pass it? It is a question your Republican steering committee ought to handle. If it were not for the fact that a great change has come over our friend from Illinois, and he is now appearing in a new rôle, it would be a different matter. This is not the HOLADAY I used to know, the great economist, the HOLADAY of Illinois, who used to sit on that committee and fight to cut down expenses. This is a new kind of HOLADAY that has all of a sudden arisen in the House to advocate much spending.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The school buildings authorized and appropriated for herein shall be constructed with all doors intended to be used as exits or entrances opening outward, and each of said buildings having in excess of eight rooms shall have at least four exits. Appropriations carried in this act shall not be used for the maintenance of school in any building unless all outside doors thereto used as exits or entrances shall open outward and be kept unlocked every school day from one-half hour before until one-half hour after school hours.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I feel the continued abuse the gentleman from Texas has heaped upon me warrants me in making this statement. I had hoped it would not be necessary. The gentleman, by his statements here, has undertaken to create a false impression. I am not attempting to delay the procedure on this bill. I have offered some half dozen amendments, taking five minutes on each one. I have one or two more amendments to offer.

This is what occurred in the committee: The subcommittee conducted the hearings as usual. At the conclusion of the hearings in other years it has been the practice for the subcommittee to meet in executive session and mark up the bill. A meeting was called for that purpose. I think, perhaps, that day the chairman was not able to attend. We met a time or two. The chairman—and he and I are very good friends—asked me if there were any items in the bill that I was especially interested in. I gave the chairman and the clerk some notations of changes I thought it might be well to make. Then, without being consulted further, and so far as I know without any further meeting of the committee, the report was prepared. I knew what the feeling and the judgment of the chairman was as to some of the changes that were made. As to other changes I knew nothing about them.

This particular item with reference to the Jefferson High School I had no idea would ever be cut down. The amendment submitted simply brings it back to the Budget figures.

It is my understanding that procedure such as I have outlined has only occurred once in the history of Congress, and that was during a Republican administration when a chairman of a subcommittee prepared the bill without consultation with the minority members. When it was reported to Mr. Madden, who was then chairman of the appropriation committee, he immediately sent the bill back to the subcommittee and had the subcommittee reconsider it, whereupon the chairman of the subcommittee resigned from the subcommittee and from the full committee.

Now, I am not attempting to delay consideration of the bill. In the case of many of the amendments I have offered I did not know there was any question of the items being changed. I knew nothing about it. Therefore I am not willing, and I do not want, to be held responsible for the report of this committee containing many items I think can not be justified and are entirely wrong. I have introduced amendments to change some of these items. I have two or three more which I believe are justified. I made a full and frank statement about the facts as I understood them with reference to the Jefferson High School. The gentleman from Texas, if you will notice, has never at any time discussed the merits of my amendments but has persisted in a personal attack upon me.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. No; I do not care to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised at the intimation of the gentleman from Illinois. He has never at any time made such a complaint to me or, so far as I know, to any other member of the committee. Nor has the gentleman from Nebraska. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], who, in my opinion, knows as much about District appropriations as any other Member of the House, and whose counsel and advice we were always anxious to have; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY], who has given this bill a great deal of attention, have both been accorded every courtesy.

I regret that we did not have the advantage of the services of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS]. I am certain it was through no lack of invitation from the committee.

Throughout the hearings, which lasted for many weeks—in fact since the holidays—I not only had the clerk notify the gentleman of the sessions of the committee, but I personally called his office repeatedly. His stenographer would always assure me she would give him the message when he came in, but he has never appeared at any meeting of the committee during this session of Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. The RECORD shows I was absent from Congress on a mission of the House during part of the time hearings were held on this bill.

Mr. CANNON. A very small part of the time. The gentleman was absent 10 days. These hearings ran for weeks.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman let me finish? When I arrived back at my office a report came there of the hearings. It was not relayed to me. That is no one's fault but my own; but day after day on the floor of the House I have seen the gentleman from Missouri; and if my presence at the hearings had been necessary, had they wanted my advice, the gentleman from Missouri could easily have told me.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman was notified by the clerk of the committee every time we had a meeting, and I myself called up his office repeatedly and his secretary, when she answered, always answered that she would relay my message to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Had the gentleman wanted me, I was on the floor. We have seen each other time after time, yet he said nothing to me about it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has long been a member of the committee and knew hearings were in progress, even if he had not been notified, but he never at any time came to the meetings. Written notice was sent to him; telephone messages were sent to him, and his secretary said she would tell him; but at no time did he ever attend a meeting. I am certain it could have been for no personal reasons, as the warm friendship between the gentleman and myself and all the committee has continued uninterrupted up to this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. You say my secretary said she would tell me?

Mr. CANNON. Whoever was in your office.

Mr. SIMMONS. The girl in my office was absent for the two weeks before this bill was reported; so, if the gentleman tried to get me, it was more than two weeks prior to reporting the bill.

Mr. CANNON. She said she would tell you whenever she answered. Of course, there were times when the calls were unanswered.

Mr. SIMMONS. It was not at the time this bill was marked up.

Mr. CANNON. The clerk was instructed to notify him and all other members of that meeting. But, of course, the gentleman, after being in charge of the bill for a number of years, knew hearings were in progress. He did not favor us either with his presence or his suggestions during the entire session, and now he comes in and encourages this filibuster after the bill is reported. If he had advised us of his interest in these items before the bill was reported, we would have been glad to have given his wishes every consideration.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. In all fairness to both gentlemen and both sides of the House, I would like to suggest that the country would probably be more interested in getting this bill through than they would be in the differences here on the floor of the House; and I want to appeal to the gentlemen that we get down to the bill and settle it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is entirely right. For the first time since I have been a Member of the House they have made this a partisan issue. That is much to be regretted. These appropriation committees are business committees. There is no place for partisanship in any of their proceedings, either in the committee or on the floor. When I was in the minority I might not always agree with the committee, but when we reported a bill and it came to the floor I stood by the decision of the committee. In all the time that I have been in this House the gentleman can not point to one single time that I did not support the bill as it was reported by the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Chairman. We want to get through with this bill.

Mr. SNELL. You will get through quicker if you let the gentleman have five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are going to filibuster, let them filibuster.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that debate has been exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. That does not prevent a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I make the point of order that debate has been exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], who says we ought to proceed with the consideration of this bill rather than have the constant talk that has been going back and forth across the aisles.

I have twice stated, and I want to again repeat to my friend from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], that I think no one on the floor of this House knows better than I do the volume of work involved in writing one of these bills and presenting it to the House, as well as conducting the hearings, and I know, just as the gentleman knows, how unthankful this task is. I am not criticizing.

I have told on the floor of the House two or three times, and it need not be repeated in detail, why I was not present at the hearings. Had the gentleman wanted me at the time the bill was written up, he could have gotten me without much difficulty, because we have seen each other day after day. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] tells me, and has stated on the floor of the House, that the bill was not written up by the committee and that he was not notified; but this has nothing to do with the matter.

I have been accused here by the gentleman's own words to-day of filibustering. Let me direct my remarks just a minute to that statement. Up until the time I took the floor right at this minute I have consumed on this bill 14 minutes of the time of the House. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] have used at least twice this amount of time castigating the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY]. Those two gentlemen have consumed as much time on this bill as all the rest of the membership together and then they cry filibuster. I have engaged in no filibuster. I have made no motion that delayed the time of the House. So let us be fair in the language we use. The RECORD shows that at one time I occupied 10 minutes and at another time I occupied 4 minutes of the time of the House. There has been no filibuster. Certainly a Member of the House occupying the position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] has the right to make motions here and should not be charged with conducting a filibuster when he is presenting, under the rules of the House, honest, bona fide amendments to this bill. The gentleman has the right under the rules, to do what he has done and he has engaged in no filibuster, and to charge me with conducting a filibuster when I have sat silent on the floor of this House in the face of repeated attacks, when I have taken no part in the debates when there were things that might well have been said to the House, possibly, is not fair. I have remained silent in order that I might not be subject to the charge which the gentleman has just made, and I think on due reflection the gentleman will withdraw that statement, as it is unworthy of him.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit, I want to express the hope that we may go along with the bill. This character of debate has gone forward here for about a week, and I am expressing the hope to both sides that we may get through with this bill to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] is quite correct. We ought to go ahead with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, if my own side, including the gentleman from Missouri, is going to insist on making these replies on these pro forma amendments, of course, we can not keep a quorum on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee certainly ought to have the right to answer.

Mr. HASTINGS. He has answered the statement half a dozen times. It has been answered every day since the bill has been under consideration.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the RECORD will bear me out that from the time this bill was first brought to the floor I have never at any time criticized either the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] or the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS]. That is not only true of this year but it has been true of every year. Whenever the District bill has been before the different Congresses I have supported every position taken by these gentlemen and have never at any time offered opposition to the bill or to any of the items they contained. Not only will the RECORD show that I have whole-heartedly cooperated with them at all times but each of these gentlemen will themselves testify to that fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has had his time. Not only has the gentleman opposed this measure at every opportunity but last year before the committee of conference the gentleman from Nebraska endeavored to increase the House appropriations on practically every item in disagreement.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the pending amendment, which is to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. CANNON. I shall proceed in order. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] have brought up this subject out of a clear sky. I have never made any but the kindest references to either of the gentlemen. It would be discourteous to them if I failed to reply to them.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is talking about the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] and not the last three words, which is the amendment pending before the House. I insist on the point of order in order to expedite action on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am proceeding in order. The subject before the committee is the statement by the gentleman from Illinois that he was not present when the bill was marked up.

In response to that suggestion, I wish to say emphatically that all members of the committee were notified and we had a final meeting at night, attended by the gentleman from Illinois and myself, with the clerk of the committee, and we went through the entire bill. After we had concluded——

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order, and the Chair should take the gentleman off the floor and enforce the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will please confine his remarks to the last three words.

Mr. CANNON. I shall proceed in order.

After we had concluded I asked the gentleman from Illinois if there was anything else he wanted changed in the bill and told him we would change it if he wished. And the gentleman from Illinois said he had no further suggestions to make.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I again make the point of order and expect the rules of the House to be enforced.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri must proceed in order. The last three words are "after school hours." [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have explained the situation, and in conclusion I wish to say that the bill was marked up this time exactly like it was marked up every time the gentleman from Nebraska was in charge of the bill. We followed both last year and this year exactly the procedure followed by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order, and I insist that the rules of the House be enforced.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of a suitable place for the reception and detention of girls and women over 17 years of age, arrested by the police on charge of offense against any laws in force in the District of Columbia, or held as witnesses or held pending final investigation or examination, or otherwise, including transportation, the purchase and maintenance of necessary motor vehicles, clinic supplies, food, upkeep and repair of buildings, fuel, gas, ice, laundry, supplies and equipment, electricity, and other necessary expenses, $8,880; for personal services, $8,360; in all, $17,240.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask my colleagues to bear with me to speak briefly upon another subject, as I do not think I shall use the whole of the five minutes.

We have during the past week been further reminded of the great necessity for further restriction of immigration and of the registration of aliens.

To-day I am introducing three bills on the subject. One of them would require the registration, including fingerprinting, of all aliens upon entering our country, those who may enter in the future would be thus registered and identified, and those who are already here would be required to register. All would be required to keep upon their person such identification card or certificate, and the failure to produce it would be grounds for deportation.

Another of the bills will close our doors to immigrants. It would stop all immigration to our country. The other would stop 99 per cent of all immigrants. In other words, it restricts by 99 per cent. I have in my hand a brief statement from the Secretary of Labor giving information relative to the nationality and citizenship of Joseph Zangara, or Giuseppe Zangara, who assaulted five American citizens and apparently attempted to assassinate the next President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is as follows:

In checking over the records of the Labor Department we found there were 11 Joseph Zangaras who had been naturalized and two others with warrants of deportation pending against them and were out on bond. This made it necessary to go over the records of the entire list in order to definitely determine who the actual assailant was, which had to be verified by photographs from Florida and checked with the immigration and naturalization files in Washington, as well as to have verification from the different ports of entry.

We have definitely identified Joseph Zangara as having been naturalized by the common pleas court of Passaic County at Paterson, N. J., September 11, 1929. Zangara was born in Ferruzzo, Italy, on September 7, 1900; left Naples on the 18th day of August, 1923; arrived at Philadelphia on the 2d day of September, 1923, on the steamship Martha Washington; made his declaration of intention to become a United States citizen on May 21, 1924, at Hackensack, N. J., in the common pleas court of Bergen County, giving his occupation as that of a mason.

Zangara was less than 23 years of age when he entered this country, and we are unable to find that he had any police record in Italy and have been unable to locate any here up to the time of his naturalization. We have asked the police of Bergen and Passaic Counties, N. J., where he had resided from the time of arrival in the United States until his naturalization, and they report they have no records against him.

We have no record of Zangara having left the United States since his entry in 1923, and this department has issued no reentry permits to him during this time. Therefore, if he was in Italy in 1929, we have no record of his leaving or reentering the United States. Our records show continuous residence since his entry into the United States.

It is quite singular that the assassins of Presidents and would-be assassins, many of them, have not been American citizens. It is quite singular that in a recent newspaper dispatch Zangara has been spoken of as a communist and an anarchist. The Washington Star, under headline Hackensack, N. J., recently said:

Rosario Candrilli, local contractor, described Zangara as an "inflammatory character." Refreshing his memory about the bricklayer, he seemed positive that he was a radical, and declared: "He was an anarchist, socialist, and communist." Candrilli said he had employed Zangara on several jobs around Bergen County, and said he had a reputation as a "lunch-hour" talker.

Such is the type of man that tried to assassinate the President elect.

Leon Czolgosz, who assassinated President McKinley, was of foreign parentage. His father Polish, his mother German. John Schrank, who attempted to assassinate Teddy Roosevelt, was born in Bavaria; and now we have Zangara, another of foreign birth attempting to kill our President elect and, in a way, boasting about it. Many of the crimes committed in our country are by foreigners or those of foreign birth. It is time the Congress should awake to its duty and close our Nation's doors to immigrants. We must try to assimilate those already here, try to Americanize them and teach them to think in American terms. Their traditions and training have been widely different from the American ideals of society and government. If we continue to permit them to enter our midst, America will lose its individuality. Many of them are trying to destroy our Government and our officials, even by force. Will my colleagues not realize the gravity of the situation and join in an effort to prevent further outrages? The one so recent should be a warning to all American citizens. We must make America a safer place to live in and also preserve and protect our governmental traditions.

This attempted assassination is a challenge to our Government and civic life itself; we must meet the challenge by enacting further and more stringent immigration laws. I hope you will lend your support.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The press this morning says that our colleague [Mr. DICKSTEIN] proposes that this murderous anarchist should be deported. When they get through putting a rope around Zangara's neck in Florida he will be properly deported, and to a place where he belongs, will he not?

Mr. GREEN. I do not know whether he can be deported, but I do feel that he should be dealt with according to the laws of our country and given the full penalty.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the fingerprint bill had been the basic law of the land this man would not have been here to commit the assault.

Mr. GREEN. I believe my friend from Wisconsin is correct, and I hope he will support the bills which I am to-day introducing. If they are enacted, in the future foreigners will not be here to attempt to assassinate the future Presidents and officials of our great Republic.

Mr. SCHAFER. But how about these foreigners that send their goods over here and take the markets away from our citizens?

Mr. GREEN. I would like to say that I am supporting the bill to prevent the entry of goods that have been made by foreign monopolies and foreign government monopolies—those monopolies that are flooding our country with cheap phosphate and other materials. I am in accord with the gentleman in that respect when it comes to protecting our citizens and restricting immigration.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman's vote on the discharge of the committee in the Crowther bill does not square with his statement.

Mr. GREEN. I think the wise thing to do about the tariff is to take the matter up after March 4. Then it can be properly considered by President-elect Roosevelt and the Congress, and I venture to assure my colleague that a proper bill will, in the due course of time, be passed. I hope he will join with the Democrats in perfecting a proper bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, yes; the gentleman wants to wait until the patient dies and then call the coroner.

Mr. GREEN. I believe a far more equitable tariff bill can be had under the incoming administration.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection may I say that I hope the Congress at some future time will vote a congressional medal to Mrs. W. F. Cross, of Miami, Fla., for saving the life of our President elect. It was her hand that seized the arm of the would-be assassin and thus broke the aim that may have killed our beloved President elect. Her presence of mind, fearlessness, valor, and courage is appreciated by all supporters of free government and deserves recognition of the Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this item and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. And at this time I give notice that from now on debate must be confined to the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we have before us at the present time the appropriation for the District police department. I think in the city of Washington we have one of the finest police forces to be found anywhere in the United States.

On Monday next the House will be confronted with a vote on a resolution resubmitting the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. In the police statistics furnished to the committee, which will be found on page 355 of the hearings, we find some very valuable information upon the question of prohibition. These statistics go back only to 1923, and therefore I can not refer to what happened prior to prohibition; but in 1923, 3,934 people were arrested for violating the Volstead Act in the Capital of the Nation, and 9,106 were arrested for other liquor violations. These latter were arrested for what is termed a violation of the Sheppard Act, and the Sheppard Act provides that it is a violation of law to drink liquor in public places or to drive an automobile while intoxicated.

That makes a total of 13,040 people who were arrested for violating the liquor laws in 1923. What has happened since 1923? An increase annually. The statistics for 1932 show that 4,104 people were arrested for violating the Volstead law, and 15,580 people for violation of the Sheppard Act; so a total of 19,684 people were arrested for the violation of the liquor laws in the District of Columbia in 1932—6,644 more people were arrested for violating the prohibition laws in 1932 than in 1923. In the District of Columbia there is cooperation between the prohibition authorities and the District police, because both are practically Federal authorities. I think no better argument can be submitted as to why the eighteenth amendment should be repealed than exactly what has happened in the Capital of the Nation. It is indisputable proof that the liquor laws can not be enforced. Why, then, should we spend millions of the people's money trying to enforce laws which time has shown are violated every second of the day and night.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For personal services in the conduct of hygiene and sanitation work in the public schools, including the necessary expenses of maintaining free dental clinics, $87,950: Provided, That of the persons employed as medical inspectors 1 shall be a woman, 4 shall be dentists, and 4 shall be of the colored race, and that of the graduate nurses employed as public-school nurses 3 shall be of the colored race.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLEOD: Page 47, after line 12, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For furnishing by the health officer to undernourished children in private, parochial, and public schools of the District of Columbia such food at such schools as may be deemed necessary, in the opinion of the health officer, after examination of such children, properly to feed such underfed and undernourished children the sum of $40,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill and is a change of existing law. However much we may sympathize with undernourished children in District of Columbia schools, there are children undernourished in every other school in the United States who are entitled also to consideration, and however much we sympathize with them, we have no right to change the law and begin to nourish them here in Washington and leave them unnourished everywhere else in the United States. I make the point of order.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment is in order. It is an additional appropriation of $40,000. This is the emergency relief section. This is the hygiene section of the bill. Due to the ruling of both the department and the Committee on Appropriations that there will be inadequate funds to properly care for welfare in the District, absolutely shutting out the children, I feel this is in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any authorization in law for such an appropriation?

Mr. BLANTON. No, Mr. Chairman; there is no such authorization.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Michigan point the Chair to any such authorization?

Mr. McLEOD. I feel this comes within the general authorization.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that this is legislation on an appropriation bill, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOARD OF PUBLIC WELFARE

For personal services, $105,580.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Page 54, after line 9, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"PUBLIC WELFARE

"Emergency relief of residents, District of Columbia: For the purpose of affording relief to residents of the District of Columbia who are unemployed or otherwise in distress because of the existing emergency, to be expended by the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia, by loan, employment, and/or direct relief, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Board of Commissioners, and without regard to the provisions of any other law, payable from the revenues of the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1934, $625,000: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be available for administrative expenses including necessary personal services."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill, and by its terms seeks to change existing law.

If the Chair will note, it provides that "without regard to" law now existing this shall be in order. It is a change in existing law, and legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] cite any authorization in law for this appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The only thing I can cite, Mr. Chairman, is the last deficiency bill, which carried emergency relief in the sum of $625,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be authorization.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. This is the same language as was used in the deficiency bill.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not an authorization in law.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The same item was carried on the second page of this bill for a similar purpose, but different wording, and that went out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PRALL). The Chair thinks that the language "without regard to the provisions of any other law" makes the amendment legislation on an appropriation bill, and is subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LaGUARDIA: Page 54, line 9, insert the following: "To enable the Board of Public Welfare to provide for the relief of all needy persons not otherwise provided for by appropriations herein made to such board, $625,000, payable wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order if the gentleman desires to make a statement.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Oh, no. If I am going to be kicked out I would rather know it now.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not germane to this paragraph in the bill. The Chair will note that on line 9 it provides for personal services. Personal services means salaries. This is salaries of officials. The amendment seeks to grant relief to people. It is not personal service and it is not germane, either to that paragraph or the preceding one.

I also make the point of order that it is legislation unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair believes the amendment is germane, and will so rule. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is a long-established rule that an amendment must not only be germane to the bill but must be germane to that portion of the bill to which it is offered. This clearly is not germane to this portion of the bill. If it is germane at all, it is germane to the item on page 64 under which it properly comes. It could not possibly be germane to this section of the bill. If the gentleman desires, I can cite many authorities to the effect that it must be germane not only to the bill and the subject matter of the bill but to that portion of the bill to which it is presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. I had it marked originally for page 64, but inasmuch as the gentleman from Virginia offered his amendment here, I thought perhaps that point would not be raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might state that he expected that is where it would be offered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to preserve the integrity of our rules, in view of the fact that the point of order which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] made was identical with the one which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made, the Chair would want to change his ruling, as to the first point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understood, the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] was that the amendment was not in its proper place.

Mr. BLANTON. I made that same point of order, because it was not germane to this paragraph or the preceding paragraph, and the Chairman overruled it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not aware of that.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the ruling of the Chair would be the same on both of them?

The CHAIRMAN. The same ruling.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The ruling of the Chair sustained the point of order that it was not germane to the particular section to which it was offered?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL ADMINISTRATION, WORKHOUSE AND REFORMATORY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

For personal services, $290,540.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLADAY: On page 57, line 3, strike out "$290,540" and insert "$326,090."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this item and all amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment adds $35,000 and brings the total amount up to the Budget figure.

The committee report on page 14 states:

This saving is made by eliminating 24 positions appropriated for in the 1933 bill, which have not been filled by the Board of Public Welfare.

It has been the practice in the District to send the worst class of its prisoners to the Federal penitentiaries at Atlanta and Leavenworth, and for that the District has paid something over $200,000 a year. Two or three years ago it was deemed advisable and economical for the District to arrange to take care of their own prisoners. Therefore a new walled inclosure was authorized at the reformatory.

When the bill was passed a year ago, it was expected that the walled inclosure would be completed very shortly and we appropriated money to pay for the necessary new guards. There was some delay in completing the new building. The additional guards were not appointed because they were not needed until the new building was completed. At the date of the hearings this year the evidence disclosed that one cell block had just been occupied. That cell block held 50 men. I think on the day of the hearing they were moving into the second cell block and had about 10 men in there. I do not know what the condition is to-day. It may be that the cell blocks to house 200 men are about filled to-day, although I am not advised. Since the date of the hearing 12 of the 24 positions have been filled; and when all of the cell blocks in the new walled inclosure are filled, all of the new guards will be appointed. If this item is not brought back to the Budget figures, the District will, on the 1st of July next, face the proposition of having 200 of its worst criminals, some of them serving life sentences, in this new institution, and the District will be without guards to guard these 200 criminals.

I called the attention of one of the Members on the majority side to this matter a day or two ago. I think the chairman took this action without realizing what will take place on the 1st of July.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Since in the very near future we are going to have a lot of vacant cells in Federal penitentiaries throughout the country, owing to the repeal of the prohibition laws, why should we burden the taxpayers with this additional expense at this time?

Mr. HOLADAY. The men who are confined in this new institution are not there serving sentences for violation of the prohibition law. They are serving sentences for the more vicious crimes, carrying sentences up to life.

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes. We will have a great many vacant beds and cells in the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth and the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta after the prohibition laws are repealed. Instead of expanding the present building program at the taxpayers' expense, why not take advantage of the opportunity to help balance the Budget and save some money for the people?

Mr. HOLADAY. Of course, at the time this new building was authorized, Congress did not know that the gentleman from Wisconsin was going to repeal the prohibition law. He did not inform us. We, therefore, went ahead, and the buildings were constructed and are now completed.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman admits that we are going to repeal it pretty soon?

Mr. HOLADAY. Well, I admit the gentleman from Wisconsin says we are.

Mr. SCHAFER. The facts so indicate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment if adopted would put $35,460 more into this bill for District of Columbia prison guards that are not necessary. Our committee and our splendid chairman carefully considered this matter. They carefully passed on all of the facilities that we allowed down there.

But I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] when he says there is going to be a decrease of inmates in penal institutions if saloons return that he is sadly mistaken. Unfortunately, in the days of the saloons our friend from Wisconsin was such a young, immature youth that he has forgotten about those saloon days. He was such a small urchin at that time that he can not remember. Some of us older ones do remember. Some of us who sat on circuit benches during the days of the saloon and tried men who had committed crimes as a result of that nefarious business know something about it.

You are going to build more penitentiaries whenever you put back the road houses; you are going to build more jails; you are going to build more penal reformatories and put more convicts on rock piles than ever before in the history of the United States. The people of Wisconsin, the mothers and fathers who love their children there, will never forgive the gentleman from Wisconsin if his vote next Monday puts saloons back upon the country. They will hold that against him as long as their children are endangered by it. There are communities now that do not know the evil of saloons; they never had them, yet by his vote next Monday the gentleman from Wisconsin will try to inflict them with saloons. However, it is going to be a long, long way from the vote next Monday to the return of saloons. The people are now slowly waking up. When they become fully aroused, beware of their punishment. They are going to punish the politicians who vote saloons back into the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I would gladly yield to both of my friends, but I have not the time. Oh, I know, New Jersey, New York, St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee—comes the demand—in specially prepared conventions will promptly ratify, but there are 48 States in this Union; and you can not fix it up this time so that the mothers and fathers will have no voice in State conventions—no two-bit politicians are going to run those conventions; they are going to be run by the fathers and mothers of America this time. They are now waking up. They are now organizing. They are going to be the greatest and most powerful organization that ever existed in the United States. They have made up their minds that the saloon "shall not pass" in this country; and the gentleman from Wisconsin might just as well save his vote, because in the future it is going to embarrass him.

But, I must get back to this bill. We ought not to add this $35,460. We ought to turn down this amendment. Why, the gentleman from Illinois seems to think he can take the people's money out of the Treasury with impunity just because this is the District appropriation bill. It is argued "Oh, the money comes out of District funds." As a matter of fact, every single taxpayer in this District is looking to us right now to protect his interest. I have at heart the interest of the people of the District of Columbia as well as the interests of all the people, and we have no right to waste their money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide a working capital fund for such industrial enterprises as may be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $46,000: Provided, That the various departments and institutions of the District of Columbia and the Federal Government may purchase, at fair market prices, as determined by the commissioners, such surplus products and services as meet their requirements; receipts from the sale of products and services shall be deposited to the credit of said working capital fund and said fund including all receipts credited thereto, shall be used as a revolving fund for the fiscal year 1934 for the purchase and repair of machinery, tools, and equipment, purchase of raw materials and manufacturing supplies, purchase, maintenance, and operation of nonpassenger-carrying vehicles, purchase and maintenance of horses, and purchase of fuel for manufacturing purposes; for freight, personal services, and all other necessary expenses; and for the payment to inmates or their dependents of such pecuniary earnings as the commissioners may deem proper.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against so much of the paragraph as relates to the amount of $46,000 in line 22 of page 57, the point of order being that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman's point of order against the entire paragraph or against the proviso?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Against the proviso, beginning in line 22.

Mr. Chairman, may I point out just briefly that the object of this clause is to permit not only the District government but also the Federal Government to purchase manufactured articles, prison-made, from the reformatory at Lorton.

I would say there is a well-established legislative policy in this Congress against purchase by the Government, or, in fact, against the use of anything which the Government has anything to do with of prison-made goods. This Congress has gone so far as to say that the States may not use prison labor, paid by funds allocated to them by Congress, for State aid to roads. This is clearly a provision that puts prison-made labor in competition with other labor at this time when I do not think that Congress, if it realized the situation, would ever dream of doing so.

I think it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill, Mr. Chairman, and I submit the point of order on that.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is well taken.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on lines 20 to 22, the point of order including the sign and figures "$46,000," that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first dispose of the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Will the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] restate his point of order?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against lines 20 to 23, including the sign and figures "$46,000" that it is legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If you deny the appropriation of $46,000, in what way would these people be engaged?

Mr. GOSS. This is to provide a working capital fund which could be used as a revolving fund.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. For the purpose of keeping these people employed. Without any money available at all for that purpose, what would they do?

Mr. GOSS. I do not know. I think that is a subject that ought to be taken up with the District of Columbia Legislative Committee, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. How have they been engaged in the past?

Mr. GOSS. I could not answer the gentleman's inquiry, but I understand this is coupled up with a lot of provisos; and as long as we have stricken out the proviso and not put certain limitations on this fund, I made the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in these revolving funds. I hope the point of order will be sustained.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, this provision has been carried in the bill for several years. The prisoners there are employed in making brick, in making manhole covers and things of that kind used in the city, and I think brooms and various other articles.

There is not anything sold on the open market. Of course, we all admit it is undesirable to have prison-made goods, but we must find something for the prisoners to do.

Mr. GOSS. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the proviso containing the limitation on this fund has been stricken out on a point of order, so we now have to consider only the capital fund of $46,000, which is open to use by the commissioners in any way they see fit, without any limitations and without any restrictions as to what they may do with the fund.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. May I ask the gentleman a further question? I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that these prisoners have been engaged in the manufacture of certain articles.

Mr. HOLADAY. And also in certain construction work. The building I mentioned just a moment ago was built by this prison labor.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. This is the same appropriation that has been made for a number of years?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. But I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the fund heretofore had certain limitations placed upon it. These limitations have now been removed by the point of order and this leaves the fund to be used in any way the commissioners may see fit.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I appreciate the gentleman's position, but I am wondering what we are going to do with this prison labor if there is no appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss].

The Clerk read as follows:

TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL

For personal services, $80,200.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLER: Page 60, line 12, after the word "services," strike out "$80,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$81,300."

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have ever taken part in the disputations over bills of this character, making appropriations for the District of Columbia, including institutions for the care of tuberculosis patients, and I only do so at the present time for this reason: It was my misfortune to have a long, and what was considered a terrible, experience with this disease, tuberculosis. It was supposed that I was ready to go underground about 40 years ago. I was compelled to live outdoors for a number of years. I did this, very fortunately, and during this time I learned something about tuberculosis. It is for this reason only that I am at all injecting myself into this debate.

I offer the amendment for the purpose of calling attention to these facts. Tuberculosis is a communicable disease. If it were possible for us to keep everybody who has tuberculosis away from everybody who has it not, we could entirely destroy the disease in one generation. We have made great strides along this line in the last few years because we are learning something about the hygiene necessary to this end.

This tuberculosis hospital for adults in the District of Columbia is almost entirely occupied by people who are not able to pay their own way. They are, nevertheless, your brothers and sisters and my brothers and sisters in truth and in fact.

Let us take it purely from a selfish standpoint, first: If we do not provide adequate hospitalization, we permit the men and women who are out there to be neglected, and the hospital is now filled to capacity. They become the distributors of the disease to your children and everybody else's children, because tuberculosis to a large extent is a disease of childhood and young manhood and young womanhood. We ought not, for the sake of saving a few thousand dollars, make this hospital a great failure and a great disgrace to this country, and I know the committee has no such intention.

I have been going over the facts and figures and the reports with a great deal of care, and I have also gone over the Budget. The men who wrote this Budget are not ignorant men. They are men who really know what ought to be done about tuberculosis, better than anybody who has not had special training and special experience along this line. Furthermore, their original estimates, which have been so drastically cut by this committee, were approved by the board of public welfare, the board of commissioners, and by the Budget Bureau. I believe we ought to go back to the Budget figure, and it is exactly for that purpose that I have proposed this amendment.

I call your attention to the fact that the present Budget estimate is $5,000 less than it was last year, notwithstanding the fact that the increase in the number of patients is 16 per cent, and that there will be an even greater percentage of increase next year. Of that there can be no doubt at all. We have, as a matter of fact, considered here that the number has increased 16 per cent and, as pointed out by the chairman, food prices have decreased 16 per cent, so that makes a stand-off of the two. But there is an item that has been overlooked, apparently, in making the cut, and that is the direct increase in the cost of coal because of a much larger heating capacity which has been put into the hospital since last year. The amount should be exactly the same, even if there were to be no increase in the number of patients. But the increase is 16 per cent this year over last year, and this is the smallest estimate made for next year.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman's discussion, and I am in hearty accord with his views on the subject. But the District has been more than generous in its provisions. We are appropriating in this bill four times the amount appropriated 10 years ago. The small reduction in this item was in compliance with the policy adopted by the general committee discouraging appropriations for new positions of any kind. We did not provide the part-time services of a new physician. Otherwise the appropriation for this year is identical with the appropriation given them last year.

Mr. KELLER. I want to call attention to the fact that that is a mistake. Here is a large cut of $12,000 for food and ice.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman is anticipating. That does not belong to this item.

Mr. KELLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were 19 ayes and 27 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For provisions, fuel, forage, harness, and vehicles, and repairs to same, gas, ice, shoes, clothing, dry goods, tailoring, drugs and medical supplies, furniture and bedding, kitchen utensils, medical books, books of reference, and periodicals not to exceed $200, temporary services not to exceed $1,000, maintenance of motor trucks, and other necessary items, $49,000.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, line 19, strike out the figures "$49,000" and insert "$61,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was under the impression that all these amendments had to be offered at once. Therefore, what I said a moment ago applies to this amendment also.

You only succeed in arresting tuberculosis by making the care so tender and so effective as to permit the repair of the waste faster than the disease destroys the tissue.

I want to say to you that three or four years ago, when a foreign ambassador was here in this country wanting to know something about tuberculosis, he did not go to the city of Washington to find out, but he sent medical experts to the Cook County Sanitarium in Chicago. The sanitarium in Washington is not comparable to that of the Cook County Sanitarium in Chicago.

Now, I am asking that $12,000 be restored principally for food, because if you check over it, you will find that most of these items are specifically stated in the Budget, and the food items ought to be replaced.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Is not it a fact that the medical authorities say that food is more important than medicine?

Mr. KELLER. It is certainly one of the most important things.

Mr. MAY. More so than the medicine?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; it is of primary importance that they shall be fed and cared for to the best possible advantage so as to permit nature to do its healing work.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. And if the gentleman's amendment should prevail and the money not be used for feeding these inmates, it would not be lost to the Government?

Mr. KELLER. Oh, no; certainly not. I thank the gentleman for making that suggestion. If this money should not be used for food it would be returned, of course. I am asking only because I know so well from personal experience what it means, and I am, therefore, pleading for these 205 suffering men and women who have no other way of caring for themselves. They are your brothers and my brothers and your sisters and my sisters.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from Illinois know more about this matter than his colleague from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], who has this bill in charge, who has been holding hearings for two months, day and night part of the time? Is the gentleman more concerned at heart about the people here, or does he have more of the milk of human kindness in his breast?

Mr. KELLER. Surely not.

Mr. BLANTON. Than our friend from Missouri?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly not. That is the reason that I am making my appeal to the gentleman from Missouri. It is because he has the milk of human kindness in his breast. But a man who has had four years of a fight against tuberculosis knows more about it than any man can know who has not had such a fight. [Applause on floor and in galleries.] That is the reason I am pleading for these people. I know from experience what that suffering means.

Mr. SCHAFER. And the gentleman from Texas does not follow the committee half the time.

Mr. KELLER. I am not going to talk about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I will put up my record for voting for the committee as against that of the gentleman.

Mr. KELLER. Oh, gentlemen, I do not want you to fight; I want you to agree.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, nobody could be more interested in the eradication of the white plague and the care of those menaced by it than I am, and nobody could consider the gentleman's suggestions more sympathetically than I do; but we have made ample provision here. According to the statement the gentleman has just made, the increase in patients is offset by the decrease in costs of maintenance. There is no occasion for apprehension that any will be neglected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 17, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements to buildings and grounds, including roads and sidewalks, $4,000.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment which I had at this portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GALLINGER MUNICIPAL HOSPITAL

Salaries: For personal services, including not to exceed $2,000 for temporary labor, $323,816.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I had an amendment at the desk which I desired to offer at the end of line 6, page 61.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has read the succeeding paragraph down through line 9, and under the rule I make the point of order that the amendment comes too late. A Member can not just put an amendment on the Clerk's desk ahead of time and expect it to be considered when the paragraph is reached. The Member must get up when the paragraph is read and offer his amendment.

Mr. KELLER. But the gentleman himself was bothering me so that I could not hear what the Clerk read.

Mr. BLANTON. I was eulogizing the gentleman for being a good general who, when he is defeated, withdraws his forces.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas is out of order. He can not make a point of order in the well of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Wisconsin is mistaken. I am doing that very thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois should have offered his amendment at the time the Clerk was reading from line 6. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return to line 6 for the purpose of offering the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as much as I sympathize with the gentleman, I regret that I shall have to object.

Mr. KELLER. I move that we go back to line 6.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I make the point of order that such a motion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. KELLER. I am in its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois is not serious in that I am sure.

Mr. BLANTON. He is entitled to make that motion whether he is serious or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that the motion is not in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The motion must be in writing.

Mr. KELLER. Do I understand that when a gentleman who is conspiring with the chairman of the committee keeps me from introducing an amendment that the Chairman will hold that I am out of order in asking to return to line 6?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate is exhausted on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that any time was fixed on the paragraph just read.

Mr. KELLER. I offer the following amendment, to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. What is the gentleman discussing?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized on his motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. All debate has been closed on this section and all amendments thereto, has it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman can not be taken off his feet by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Nor can he by a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains both points of order.

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman recognized to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. He has been.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have a unanimous-consent agreement that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall be concluded in 10 minutes. That time has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that there was such an agreement as to this section. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 61, beginning at line 3, there is this language:

For completely furnishing and equipping the Children's Tuberculosis Sanitarium, including not to exceed $1,950 for the purchase of one nonpassenger and two passenger-carrying motor vehicles (including one bus), $40,000.

The Budget provides for $60,000, and provides it very properly. What we should do is to vote with the Budget on this figure for this reason: If we pass it in its present form, this allows them to expend only $40,000; and I hope the chairman will see that he can not possibly take that up in the deficiency bill hereafter. The men who made this estimate for furnishing the Children's Hospital certainly know more about that than the chairman of this subcommittee or anybody else can know who has not had their experience. That is their life work. That is their study. That is what they are devoting themselves to. If we cut the $60,000 down to $40,000, what will we do? We will put "Cheap John" stuff in that Children's Hospital, and nothing else. The men have made this estimate during the past few months. There will be no reduction at all below the figures contained here when you go to furnish that hospital. It simply means you are going to cut out one-third of the entire amount that these men have asked for, so that these children will be sleeping on hard beds and will be treated in the cheapest possible way, when if there is any place in the world we ought to devote ourselves to the stopping of tuberculosis, it is in these children, because we can save them. We can not save the others, but we can save the children. However, we can not save them with hard beds and bad service.

If you vote this down you are voting to put the children into tuberculosis hospitals on beds that are unfit for them. Do not think a child with tuberculosis can be treated like an ordinary child. Why? Because they do not have the vitality. They have not the possible resiliency to come back that a normal child has. They must be treated as tenderly as possible. They must be fed the best way possible and not in the worst way. They must have the best equipment. That is what we ought to stand for. If this committee does not do it, I shall wonder whether they do know as much about tuberculosis as the chairman ought to know, because when the lives of those children are at stake, that is when we, above all other times, ought to do our very best for them.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. If they will buy what they are going to buy outside of Washington, which is the highest market in the country, they can do it on less than one-third of what it has been costing.

Mr. KELLER. That is a statement that I would question. Those men know about prices of the equipment they have been using for years. I did not find any such charge in the hearings. Nobody questioned their knowledge in these hearings. Nobody in fact disputed with their conclusions in those hearings.

Mr. BLANTON. You can buy in Baltimore for a third cheaper than you can here.

Mr. KELLER. Has the gentleman called that to their attention in the hearings? The hearings do not so show. I know these men have not estimated too high. If anything, they have estimated too low. We ought to give the children the best we can, not the worst. It looks to me as though the chairman ought to accept an amendment to this bill providing for this additional $20,000. It is only $20,000, but it is $20,000 in comfort and life to children who can get well and who can go on and serve their country. We ought to do it. I submit that suggestion to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the subcommittee is certainly entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLAN). The Chair shall be delighted to recognize the chairman of the subcommittee, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] addressed the Chair first.

Mr. BLANTON. But the chairman of the subcommittee was on his feet.

The CHAIRMAN. In ordinary courtesy, the Chair will be glad to recognize the chairman of the subcommittee and also the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], but the gentleman from Wisconsin made the request first, and the Chair thinks in common courtesy he is entitled to recognition.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet all the time and seeking recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gracious Democratic chairman for his fairness. I merely rose at this time to voice my protest against the filibustering tactics of Members of this House who attempted to take the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] off his feet and deny him the right to speak five minutes on his very meritorious amendment. When you go through the record of this Congress day in and day out, hour in and hour out, you will see the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has consumed very much time——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is my duty to use time in opposing the amendments offered to add several hundred thousand dollars to this bill, and I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to "the last word." The motion was to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is only laying the foundation. Wait until he proceeds.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Chair will keep the rambunctious gentleman from Texas in his seat. When you build a building you must lay a foundation first. I am laying my foundation, and I am speaking in order. [Applause.] I do not intend to have my time taken up by the gentleman from Texas. As I was stating at the time of interruption by the gentleman from Texas—day in and day out the gentleman from Texas has consumed very much time discussing the first as well as the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is building on fleeting sand.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Texas go back and call for a page and send for a copy of the rules, and read the rules of this House. The gentleman tried to hamstring the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, a colleague on his own side of the House, who was attempting to present some important facts to this House!

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that under the rules the gentleman is out of order. He is not discussing the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLAN). The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed in order.

Mr. SCHAFER. The motion before the House is to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The gentleman should be required to take his seat, under the rules of the House, or confine himself to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the amendment striking out the last word.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Texas injected the question of the last word. Mr. Chairman, that is what I am attempting to discuss.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, that the motion was to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion before the House is to strike out the last word.

Mr. KELLER. And that is the amount of "$323,816."

The CHAIRMAN. Whatever the gentleman from Wisconsin has to say on the sum of "$323,816" we shall be delighted to hear.

Mr. SCHAFER. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not continue to inject himself in this debate as I approach the discussion of "$323,816."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not conforming to the rules of the House.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, by his many interjections the gentleman is placing a greater burden on the taxpayers than that placed upon them by the amount sought to be stricken out in the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be required to take his seat, unless he can conform to the rules of the House.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman from Texas persists in making absurd points of order he will continue to aid in placing a burden on the taxpayers of the country through added costs for printing far in excess of the appropriation carried by the last word which is sought to be stricken under the pending motion. [Applause.]

While I disagree with the gentleman from Illinois on a great number of questions, he is entitled to present his views to the House. The gentleman from Illinois could not utter one word with reference to his motion to strike the last word if the gentleman from Texas had his way.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is proceeding out of order. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman take his seat, under the rules, or else proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Texas that the gentleman from Wisconsin is now proceeding in order.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Illinois should have an opportunity to present his position to the House, even though his amendments might cost the taxpayers slightly more than the total amount of the appropriation carried in the amount designated by the last word under the pending motion.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take up any more of the time of the House. I merely took this opportunity to express the hope that when our distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] representing hundreds of thousands of people tries to obtain five minutes, a Member who does not speak often, that the Members of his own party should give him a fair break, particularly one of the Members of his own party who takes up more time on the floor of the House than any 50 other Members of Congress combined. The gentleman from Texas must believe that a humble Member can discuss the last word without even speaking one word.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY RELIEF

For the purpose of affording relief to residents of the District of Columbia who are unemployed or otherwise in distress because of the existing emergency, to be expended by the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia, by loan, employment, and/or direct relief in the discretion of the Board of Commissioners and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the board and without regard to the provisions of any other law, payable from the "District of Columbia emergency relief fund, 1934," such amount as may be available in such fund: Provided, That not to exceed 8 per cent of such amount shall be available for administrative expenses including necessary personal services.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking an explanation of the proviso. I wish to obtain some information. The figure carried in this bill is 8 per cent whereas in the bill for the previous year it was 10 per cent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order, which is that the gentleman must make his point of order.

Mr. GOSS. I shall be forced to make the point of order if I am to be shut off in this way.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to insist on his point of order?

Mr. GOSS. No other course is left to me.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. I make the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law. The existing law calls for 10 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Connecticut state his point of order again?

Mr. GOSS. This is a modification of existing law. Existing law states that not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount shall be available for administrative expenses. Under the guise of a limitation this language is inserted changing existing law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph in the bill comes within the Holman rule. This reduces the administrative expenses from 10 to 8 per cent. Under the Holman rule a reduction of expenses is always in order even if it is legislation and a change of law. It is a reduction of public expenses and is admissible under the Holman rule.

Mr. GOSS. But the language "including necessary personal services" I may say to the gentleman is legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. This is not legislation; this is authorized under the original act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Texas that this apparently does not come within the Holman rule because it does not show on its face any saving in the appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. It saves 2 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it does not, the Chair may say to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, if I may supplement what the gentleman from Connecticut has said, this paragraph relates to what is called the District of Columbia emergency relief fund, 1934.

The paragraph on page 2 which creates this relief fund was stricken out on a point of order. There is, therefore, no legislation in effect creating such a fund. This paragraph itself seeks to create a fund without stating the source of the money which is to go into it.

Of course, as the Chairman has already suggested, the 8 per cent limitation is only on the amount of money which may be taken out of the entire appropriation for a particular purpose. It does not reduce the amount of the appropriation at all.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLAN). The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair sustains the point of order, as it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we insist that the whole paragraph go out under the point of order, because if part of it is subject to a point of order, the entire paragraph is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Texas that a point of order was made against the proviso.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order as to the whole paragraph, under the reservation made by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if one portion of the paragraph is out of order, the entire paragraph is out of order, and goes out if the point is raised.

One Member of the House having reserved a point of order, any other Member of the House may make or add to the point of order.

A point of order has been made against a portion of the bill by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes a further point of order against the entire paragraph. That portion of the paragraph against which the first point of order is directed is clearly out of order, and it necessarily follows that the point of order by the gentleman from Texas is well taken, and the entire paragraph is eliminated.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Inasmuch as the paragraph on page 2, creating the District of Columbia emergency relief fund, 1934, was stricken out, there being now no such fund, of course, this paragraph would be entirely inoperative. Does not the gentleman think it would be just as well to let it go out?

Mr. CANNON. I see no advantage in retaining it.

We have endeavored to give the District the fund they ask in the exact terms in which they asked it. If the House wishes to strike out on points of order the provision which we made to comply with the request of the commissioners, of course, we have no choice but to agree to it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that if the paragraph on page 2, which created this fund, had remained in the bill, this paragraph would be operative and would be of some value. As it is now, it is inoperative and of no value and actually appropriates no money whatever, there being no such fund.

Mr. CANNON. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order against the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair rules that the point of order against the paragraph made by the gentleman from Texas is well taken, as it is obviously legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have previously sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 64, after line 9, insert the following: "To enable the Board of Public Welfare to provide for the relief of all needy persons, not otherwise provided for by appropriations herein made to such board, $625,000, payable wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to this part of the bill because the paragraph to which it is offered is entitled "Municipal Lodging House and Wood Yard." It has nothing in the world to do with public welfare, and the next paragraph in the bill is war veterans' service office, and, therefore, it is not germane at this place in the bill; and also it is legislation on an appropriation bill not authorized by law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. In the first place, as to the amendment being offered at the proper place in the bill, I do not believe that requires any argument. I may say my amendment comes under the title "Emergency Relief."

Mr. BLANTON. That has been stricken out.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. True, the section has been stricken out on a point of order, but my amendment is on the same subject and is so drafted as to be germane and proper in every respect. The paragraph has been stricken out.

I am ready and desire to argue that if the Chair wants to hear me; if the Chair has any doubt about my amendment being legislation or being an appropriation unauthorized, I am ready to argue that point.

The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that this is legislation or an appropriation not authorized by law.

If I may have the attention of the Chair, I desire to call his attention to chapter 55 (44 Stats. L.) act of March 16, 1926, which provides:

An act to establish a board of public welfare in and for the District of Columbia, to determine its functions and for other purposes.

Section 10 of the act to which I refer the Chair makes specific provision for appropriations for indigent, destitute, and needy persons in the District of Columbia. Without reading the entire section, may I call the Chair's attention to paragraph (d) of section 10 of the act, which provides:

That the following purposes and duties heretofore imposed by law upon the Board of Charities shall be vested in the board * * * (d) to provide for all other aged, infirm, or needy persons, including women and children, in the manner heretofore authorized by law or by appropriations enacted by Congress.

I point out that not only is there authority in the law here to appropriate for the relief of needy persons, but also authority to do so by "appropriations enacted by Congress," even if the relief work is not specifically mentioned in the law. The gentleman from Texas took a very prominent part in the enactment of this law. If I am not mistaken, the gentleman was on the legislative committee at the time. So the authority for this appropriation is not only specifically provided for in section 10 of the act referred to, but subdivision (d) says that the board shall care for needy persons, either in the manner indicated in the law or in the manner provided, "out of appropriations enacted by Congress," and, Mr. Chairman, I have used the language of the statute in my amendment. It is germane; it is authorized by existing law, and it is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLAN). The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair holds that the amendment is germane to this portion of the bill. The Chair desires to make this statement. The act of March 16, 1926 (44 Stat. 208), provides as follows:

> The following powers and duties imposed by law prior to March 16, 1926, upon the Board of Charities shall be vested in the board, and the unexpended balance of all appropriations made for the purpose of discharging such powers and duties shall become available to the board * * * (d) to provide for all other aged, infirm, or needy persons, including women and children, in the manner authorized by law or by appropriations enacted by the Congress.

The Chair therefore holds that the amendment is in order and overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I shall be glad if the gentleman will give attention to the last clause in his proposed amendment, as to how he proposes to make it effective—to take it exclusively from the District funds.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The amendment specifically provides that the money must come exclusively from District funds.

Mr. Chairman, I will leave the mechanics of the proposition to the gentleman from Missouri. I want to speak on the merits of the amendment.

There is no doubt as to the facts. There can be no question as to existing destitution. The District of Columbia is stricken the same as every other part of the country. The responsibility is ours, and the duty to provide is ours.

There is no question but that there is an abnormal number of unemployed, needy people in this District who must obtain relief. This is no longer a theory but a condition. The citizens of the District can not feed all these needy people from private funds. We can not wait for Congress to come back and provide relief. It may be too late. It is not a matter of parliamentary procedure; it is a matter of the very life to these needy and dependent people in the District of Columbia. It is a matter of life to hundreds and hundreds of little children.

People are flocking to the National Capital for one reason and another. The law provides that indigent persons should be sent back to their homes. I have purposely worded the amendment so that the money comes out of the funds of the District of Columbia, because I knew that the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Texas would say that we were using public funds and that other places throughout the country are taking care of their needy people. While I do not agree with that theory, I did not want to inject it into my amendment. I am trying to meet a situation.

I do not say that this is a local situation. Anything that happens in the Capital is a national question. We had an episode soon after the adjournment of the last Congress, showing that treatment of needy and destitute persons was not a local matter but one of national concern.

I want to appeal to my colleagues, particularly those on the floor, for I can not appeal to those in the dugout who come in here to vote against an amendment, not knowing what it is.

Here you have a city of over 500,000 inhabitants. You will have many people coming here for one reason or another, and they can not in the general course be taken care of.

The gentleman from Texas will say that private charity can take care of them; but private charity has already done everything that it can. The community chest can not possibly take care of all the needy in these abnormal times.

This $625,000 ought to be appropriated for that purpose.

We can not adjourn and leave these unfortunate people high and dry. We can not escape the necessity of providing necessary funds for the needy of the District.

The Government employees have contributed all they can. We can not dump all our responsibility on private charitable organizations. The community chest has taken care of all that it can. We ought to follow the recommendation of the Budget Bureau and appropriate this $625,000. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], a member of the committee, has given a great deal of thought to this matter and he is in favor of my amendment. Look at that beautiful, rosy-cheeked baby who happens to be on the Speaker's desk. I want every little baby in the District to have the same opportunity of food and nourishment and to have milk and sunshine that little baby over there has had. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY], five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON], and five minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am as sympathetic with public suffering and public necessity as any man in the United States. I love little children as much as any man who ever trod the earth. This is the first time I have ever seen such a display made in the great House of Representatives, where a beautiful little child is brought upon the floor and placed in the Chairman's arms, and its presence is used to help carry an appropriation in Congress. I have seen such displays as we have just witnessed made in courthouses to influence juries, by some Clarence Darrow criminal lawyers. My friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is one of the best lawyers in the Nation, and he ought not to resort to courthouse tricks.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was not my baby.

Mr. BLANTON. No; but the gentleman very opportunely used the display of that lovely little child in arguing for an appropriation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, I do not know even who the baby is.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, when this Congress met, in the first appropriation bill that was passed, the deficiency appropriation bill, we gave the poor of the District of Columbia $625,000 in cash, notwithstanding that last year they got along with only $350,000. I know how my friend from New York feels. He wants to give a pension to every man and woman over 60 years of age. He wants to give a pension to every carpenter out of work in the city of Washington who refuses to work for less than $11 a day. We have them here who struck when they were offered $8 per day, and they will not work for less than $11 a day. He wants to pension them. They were offered $8, but refused to work for less than $11, and they struck and got their $11 per day. The bricklayers and the plasterers here will not work for $13 a day, but they insist upon getting $14 a day in Washington, to be paid out of the people's Treasury, when people back home in our 48 States are starving to death. The gentleman from New York wants to pension the plasterers and the bricklayers in Washington who refuse to work for $13 a day and get their $14 per day.

Where is this going to lead? This is somebody's money that you are appropriating. It is the money of the people of the District, if it is nobody else's. I am free with my own money, and that is why I do not have any. I give it away as fast as I can get it. But I am not free with somebody else's money. I have been, in my lifetime, a trustee for heirs and minors and widows, and I have seen to it that every dollar of their money has been properly taken care of. I am careful about spending other people's money; I am not free with it. I am not willing to appropriate it in gobs of $625,000 at a clip.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, just a minute. I want to answer my friend JOHN SCHAFER from Wisconsin. He complains because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and myself have taken some time on this bill. It is our duty to take time. We are here in charge of this bill, and under our oath it is our duty to protect it from the onslaughts of the spenders. When these amendments are brought in here, $185,000 by my friend from Illinois and $625,000 by my friend from New York, it is the duty of somebody to get up and protect this bill. It is no pleasure. It is hard work. I am here helping the gentleman from Missouri to protect the bill from these half-million-dollar amendments and save the money of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised that there should be opposition from the members of the subcommittee in charge of this bill to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. Let me briefly call to your attention what has happened with regard to this item. The subcommittee in charge of the bill recommended to the House the appropriation of an unlimited sum for exactly the purpose covered by Mr. LAGUARDIA'S amendment. The only dispute on the record was that the subcommittee wanted this appropriation made from a special fund levied for that particular purpose. In their report they raised no question as to the need nor the right of Congress nor the necessity for this appropriation. That was admitted by the subcommittee in reporting this bill to the Congress. They admitted the need, and they asked the Congress to appropriate this money.

The only question when it came before the House was whether it should be raised out of a special fund or come out of the general revenues of the District. The question as to where the money shall come from has been settled by the committee. Those provisions that would have called for the raising of this money by a special tax have gone out of the bill on points of order. That question can not now be raised. Either you are going to deny any relief money to the District of Columbia or this money must come from the revenues of the District of Columbia, as provided by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. And I repeat again to the House that the subcommittee in charge of the bill can not complain. They themselves recognized the necessity and the validity and the appropriateness of expending this fund.

Here is a case where the people of the District of Columbia, as far as they can speak, are asking for this money. Committees of business men representing civic organizations, citizens' associations, and others, have asked the Congress that their own money be spent to take care of the needy of the Capital City. It does not come from the Federal Treasury. The expenditure of this money will not increase in any way the Federal contribution to the District of Columbia. It will not increase in any way the Federal taxes. The denial of this fund will not decrease Federal taxes. It is a request made on the part of the people of this city for their own tax money to be used to supplement the voluntary gifts of the citizenship in caring for their needs. It is not a dispute with reference to wage scales. It is not a dispute with reference to whether this city has more need than other cities. It is purely a question as to whether the Congress of the United States is going to allow the people of the United States Capital to take care of their own needy, as they have asked we permit them to do. The committee itself in reporting the bill has recommended and approved the item. I submit to my friend from Texas the only question is how we are to raise the funds. That question has been decided on points of order, but we should make this appropriation as it is involved in this amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] will tell you that he developed from the people who were administering this relief in Washington the admission that there were several of them drawing salaries of $5,000 a year, and one of them drew $9,000 a year.

Mr. HOLADAY. Two of them are drawing $9,000 per year.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, admitting all of that, it does not come out of this fund. That comes from the regular funds of the District of Columbia. We can protect that. I say it should be protected, but for God's sake do not deny people something to eat in this city, because somebody is drawing a $9,000 salary that he should not have. [Applause.]

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, we are acting here to-day in the capacity of a city council for the city of Washington, D. C., and the question is whether we will provide funds for the relief of unemployed and hungry people in the District of Columbia. That is the question we are to vote on in a few minutes. I feel that every Member of this House should consider the matter seriously, before we decide that we will not allow thousands of the people of the District of Columbia who are hungry and who need relief to have something to eat during the lean days which are to follow.

I am very much interested when I see the enthusiasm manifested here now about taxpayers' money. Since I am retiring from Congress I shall refuse to go into some of the things that I could point out here to show you the actions in the past of some of these enthusiastic economists—economists of the last few weeks—against any appropriation for relief and all the time talking about saving the taxpayers' money. If you will turn back a few months, you can all remember that the preceding Congress voted in 1929, right after the stock-market crash, to give the millionaires a $200,000,000 Christmas present out of the taxes of that year, because, forsooth, some of them might have lost something on the stock market. I absolve the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] because he was not a Member of the Congress at that time.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows he has never voted for that kind of a measure yet.

Mr. PATTERSON. I absolved the gentleman. But there were only about 35 Members who voted against it. To-day, when we are talking about how much money we want to save for the people of the country and about economy, I wish we might bring ourselves to real economy. If we would reduce the interest on the national debt back to the 1914 level, when the purchasing power of the dollar was even more than it is now, we would save $300,000,000 for the people of this country. And this would not reduce salaries and turn people out of their jobs. That is where we could really save some money. Instead of that, to-day they want to keep the people of this city who are hungry and unemployed from having any relief.

I believe there are two great forces in this country. Those two great forces meet here on this item to-day. One force in this country is built up of billionaires, like Ford and Morgan and those fellows, who have brought on the conditions which prevail in this country by their selfish policy of taking too much for themselves and leaving the wage earner to go hang, and they have not moved their hands to do one thing about clearing up the serious trouble we face. Some people want to take a few dollars away from the starving and hungry people of this city in order that they may not have to pay a few more dollars in taxes out of their $20,000,000 net income. [Applause.]

I remember the distinguished Speaker of this House, before he became Speaker, said on the floor of this House at one time that he would stand for raising the income taxes in the higher brackets, to provide money to feed the hungry and starving people of this country. And the people of the country justified that stand by making him Speaker and then Vice President of the United States. I am for it to-day in this case.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] voted against the proposed legislation to stop the spending of hundreds of thousands of dollars for whisky-guzzling prohibition agents and informers, and now he seeks to stop the expenditure of funds with which to buy milk for the starving babies. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not care to have that question enter into this, because this is a question separate and apart. We have only one thing to determine, and I hope that every Member of this House will determine that on the basis of whether he stands for principles of opportunity for the hungry and needy and those who toil as against the selfish and greedy. As for me I am willing to take my stand boldly for the suffering and needy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON] has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the Members of this House, in voting upon this proposition, desire to be informed as to one thing. Is this relief fund an emergency and is it necessary? If it is, they want to vote for it, and if it is not I know they very correctly want to vote against it.

I want to address a few remarks on the question of whether this is an emergency matter or not. I saw on the floor a few minutes ago the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I call him as my first witness as to the necessity for this fund of $625,000. To go back for a moment, last year the Congress appropriated $350,000 for this purpose, which was all used.

In the recent deficiency bill Congress appropriated $625,000 to run until the end of this fiscal year, and the question arose as to what would happen thereafter. On the floor, when that bill was being considered, the gentleman from Michigan asked the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] whether it was understood that another $625,000 would be appropriated. He said—

> No, that is a matter for the regular bill. This is not predicated upon the idea that the regular bill will carry that sum. Personally, I think it ought to carry it.

Now, when you convince the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that an appropriation should be made there can be no question about the merit of the matter.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Did the gentleman from Tennessee state that it ought to be paid out of District funds or ought to be paid out of Federal funds?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. He did not say where it should come from.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman overlooks the point that the District Commissioners requested that it come out of District funds.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield any further to the gentleman from Missouri. I would like to, but my time is very limited. It is proposed that this should come out of District funds.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment reads that it is to come out of District funds, but no method is provided for carrying out that provision. If this amendment is agreed to, there is no source from which this money can come except out of joint District and Federal funds.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It comes out of the general fund, and the District has a surplus of over $5,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman knows that more than 20 cents out of every dollar in that surplus is contributed by the Federal Government and that less than 80 cents is contributed by the District. Under this amendment the Federal Government will be contributing to Washington's poor, while the poor of every other city are denied Federal aid.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further.

Not only was the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations convinced of the necessity for this emergency fund but the chairman of the subcommittee was convinced that the people of this city needed it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman has referred to me.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

When the chairman of the subcommittee tried to put it in as an original proposition requiring this money to be raised in a certain way, the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Texas went before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman from the minority.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. I wish to proceed uninterrupted. The gentleman will have opportunity in which to make reply.

Not only did the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations approve this emergency measure, but the chairman of the subcommittee and the gentleman from Texas went before the Committee on Rules and sought to have legislation on this appropriation bill made in order to raise this $625,000 by a special tax. Not being successful, the provision was stricken from the bill on a point of order.

The hearings show this sum will be exhausted by the 1st of July. The figures show—and there have been extended hearings on this matter before the committee in the consideration of the deficiency bill—the figures show that to-day 7,587 families are being provided for out of this fund.

Mr. Chairman, when the 1st of July rolls around, with conditions getting worse every day, what is going to be done about the 7,587 families who will be without food and shelter unless this appropriation is carried in this bill?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, may I say in the time of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], he having been very courteous in permitting me to do this, that I think this emergency relief for the District of Columbia is one of the most important things that has come before this Congress.

Yesterday I was talking with Mayor Manning, the mayor of my home city, Lynn, Mass. He is in Washington with some 60 other mayors from throughout the United States, on the call of the mayor of Detroit. They went before a Senate committee to-day in reference to the matter of securing relief, under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, for the cities of the country. While I was talking with the mayor of my city he brought out the fact that in our city of 102,000 people the city will spend this year $1,000,000 for the poor department alone, for the welfare department of the city of Lynn, yet here in a city of 500,000 people we are raising the question as to whether we shall give the poor of Washington $625,000.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from Illinois has yielded to me. I yield if I have the right to yield.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that his city spent $1,000,000 for poor relief. Was this sum raised entirely by the city or was some of the money supplied by the Federal Government?

Mr. CONNERY. It was all raised by the city.

Mr. CANNON. The objection here is that we are making a contribution from the funds of the Federal Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not so under my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and that is the matter I had in mind.

Mr. CONNERY. It can not be so, for the gentleman from New York says that it is not so provided in his amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MEAD. Is it in order for the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield time when the gentleman from Illinois has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Now, to proceed farther in my colleague's time: I think this is no time to be picayune in welfare-relief legislation. This is no time to argue where the money is coming from, whether it is going to be paid by the Federal Government or be raised locally. The amendment of the gentleman from New York provides that it shall come from the funds of the District. What I am primarily interested in is that the poor, suffering, and starving people in the District of Columbia get relief, whether it comes from District funds or from Federal funds. [Applause.]

I thank the gentleman from Illinois for yielding and thus giving me the opportunity to make this statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question has been raised as to whether or not this amendment limits these funds to money coming from revenues of the District of Columbia. I therefore ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, that is not a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is right; the gentleman has stated a request and not a point of order.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point of order is that I ask the amendment be read so the House may know what is in it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order; that is a request.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to endorse every word the gentleman from Massachusetts has said and add to it that the very first charge on this country—whether within the city of Washington or in any State of this Union—is to prevent suffering amongst the poor.

I do not care where the money comes from, but it must come. If we do our duty, we are not going to haggle over these things. We have got to give this to the people of Washington, if we are going to go along the line of safety and common sense that we ought to pursue.

Therefore, it seems to me there ought not to be any vote against this on this floor. It is a necessity. It is a necessity, the denial of which will lead far, unless we are wise enough to see it and meet it at the present moment. I thank you.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, all who have spoken in favor of this amendment have overlooked, intentionally or otherwise, the real point at issue. It is not a question of whether there is need in Washington, and it is not a question as to whether that need will be cared for. The question before us in the consideration of this amendment is where this $625,000 which it provides is coming from. The question is whether it is to be paid for by the people of Washington or by the people of the United States.

The amendment carries a clause providing that it shall be paid out of District funds. Such a provision is absolutely useless. It means nothing whatever because it provides no method by which it is to be enforced.

When my good friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] rose to speak to the amendment, I asked that he give particular attention to this phase of his amendment. He virtually conceded that there was no way to make it effective, and he is correct. There is no way to make it effective.

Let me repeat with emphasis that if this amendment is agreed to, the money will come out of the joint funds of the District and the Federal Government. There is no other source from which it can come. If you vote for this amendment, you are voting to take from the taxpayers of your own State and from the people of your own city funds to give to the needy of Washington when they have not enough funds for their own needy.

There is no more reason why the people of your State should be taxed to take care of the poor here in Washington than that they should be taxed to take care of the poor in New York or San Francisco or New Orleans or St. Louis. That is a responsibility resting on each community. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia realized that when they asked that this sum come exclusively from the taxpayers of Washington.

If you want to take care of the poor, treat every State and every city alike. Do not tax your people to help the unemployed in Washington, unless your own unemployed are to have the same consideration.

The Senate is voting on a bill this afternoon for that very purpose. It provides half a billion dollars for this purpose. Washington will come under the provisions of that bill with the rest of the country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Just a minute. There is less suffering in Washington than in any other city in the United States. No factories have closed down in Washington. No industrial plants have laid off their employees in Washington. No industry has discharged its workmen in Washington, as in practically every other city of the country.

The Government is still employing the same number of people. The Washington Star reports this afternoon that the District of Columbia is at the head of 36 States of the Union in the amount of construction under way. The Washington Post recently reported that the index figure of retail sales in Washington was higher than that of any other city in this reserve district. Federal employees are paid regularly, and the dollars they receive will buy more, and their salaries will buy more, than at any time in 20 years. The tax rate in Washington is low, and the benefits received are high. Out of a list of 300 cities in the United States and Canada reported in the hearings last year Washington had the lowest tax rate of all but five. Washington is the one city of the Nation that is still prosperous.

And yet when you vote for this amendment, you are not only voting to take care of the poor of the most prosperous city in the United States—a city which pays less taxes than any other city in the United States—but you are voting to saddle that expense on the cities of your own State, which have more unemployed and greater need than Washington. Your State is probably borrowing right now from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take care of its own needy, and here you propose to ask your taxpayers to take care of Washington's needy as well.

Washington is not asking you to do it. Washington is ready and able to take care of its own poor and is asking you to let her do it. The Commissioners of Washington ask that this expense come out of their own funds. And that is the question pending in this amendment. Will you let Washington take care of her own relief, or will you ask your taxpayers back home to take care of their own and Washington's, too?

This request does not come from the city government. It comes from professional welfare lobbyists, who will have a freer hand if the money comes from the joint fund than if it comes wholly from the District taxpayers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I regret that I have only a minute left. And I want to repeat that the statement in the amendment that this $625,000 is to come from District funds is meaningless. If this amendment is agreed to, more than one-fifth of it will come from the United States Treasury. There is no other source from which it can come. This $625,000 is for only six months. It is at the rate of $1,250,000 a year. So any Member who votes for it is voting to saddle more than a quarter of a million dollars on the taxpayers of the United States. That is the exact amount of the share that will be paid by the Federal Government if this amendment goes through. The issue here is not relief. The needy will be amply cared for whether this amendment is agreed to or not. The issue here is whether it shall be paid by the District or by the Federal Treasury.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment has been read.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman made the statement that this money would not come from District funds, when it would.

Mr. BLANTON. But it makes no provision for raising the money.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CANNON. I must object, Mr. Chairman, because it is misleading.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 50, noes 31.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. CANNON.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 76, noes 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the LaGuardia amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: On page 64, after the amendment just adopted, insert: "For the purpose of affording additional relief to meet the existing emergency in the District of Columbia, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated an additional sum of $40,000 to supply food for undernourished school children."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. The Chair has already ruled that the amendment would be legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment follows the same precedent as the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PRALL). The Chair may state to the gentleman from Texas that the amendment is only an authorization for an appropriation and not an appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. An authorization is legislation. We are now considering an appropriation bill, and I make the point of order that this proposed amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For personal services, $17,417; temporary labor, $6,000; for expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and for the payment of commutation of subsistence for enlisted men who may be detailed to guard or move the United States property at home stations on days immediately preceding and immediately following the annual encampments; damages to private property incident to encampment; reimbursement to the United States for loss of property for which the District of Columbia may be held responsible; cleaning and repairing uniforms, arms, and equipment; instruction, purchase, and maintenance of athletic, gymnastic, and recreational equipment at armory or field encampments, not to exceed $500; practice marches, drills, and parades; rent of armories, drill halls, and storehouses; fuel, light, heat, care, and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses; machinery and dock, including dredging alongside of dock; construction of buildings for storage and other purposes at target range; telephone service; printing, stationery, and postage; horses and mules for mounted organizations; maintenance and operation of passenger and nonpassenger carrying motor vehicles; street-car fares (not to exceed $200) necessarily used in the transaction of official business; not exceeding $400 for traveling expenses, including attendance at meetings or conventions of associations pertaining to the National Guard; and for general incidental expenses of the service, $8,400; in all, $31,817.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of Georgia: On page 69, in line 1, after the word "services," strike out "$17,417" and insert in lieu thereof "$24,750," and at the beginning of line 2, page 69, strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,650."

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I object, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment which I hope to offer in just a few minutes, and I do not think we should be shut off without being permitted to talk.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill decreases the appropriations for the District of Columbia National Guard, the militia of the District, 45 per cent of what it was last year. It decreases the appropriation 41 per cent under the estimates in the Budget.

I want the committee to understand that I have not voted to increase any appropriation above the Budget estimates, and my amendments do not contemplate the raising of these appropriations to the amount of the Budget estimates even in this case. If the amendment I am now offering and the amendment I am going to offer to this section are both adopted, you will still be taking 20 per cent from the Budget estimates for the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

I may say, in passing, that the funds appropriated for the National Guard of the several States of the Union have not been reduced a single, solitary dollar under what they were last year. Why should we cripple the militia of the District of Columbia by reducing its appropriations 41 per cent under the Budget estimates and make it impossible for it to function efficiently?

There is one appropriation of $10,000 for the pay of troops that has been made for the last 20 years. That has been cut out entirely, and I will not ask to restore that item to the bill, although it was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. We do ask you to increase two or three small items to the Bureau of the Budget estimates.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, had these amendments prepared and was going to present them himself, but in his absence I am pinch hitting for him, and I sincerely hope that before you vote against these two amendments you will look into the situation to see if the Militia of the District of Columbia is being treated fairly. I want you to find out if the Militia of the District is being treated as fairly as the militia of the several States of the Union.

As I have already said, if you adopt both of my amendments—this one and the one I am going to offer a little later—the appropriations for the militia will still be 20 per cent under the Budget estimates.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I understand the District of Columbia is the headquarters for the division composed of the Militia of the District, Maryland, Virginia, and the Artillery of Pennsylvania?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. If that is so, this will be a handicap to these troops in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. That is correct. I ask permission to incorporate in my remarks a little table furnished to me by General Stephan, the commanding general of the Militia of the District of Columbia. It shows the appropriations last year, the Budget estimates, and the amounts carried in the bill that is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, permission is granted.

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

Statement showing 45 per cent reduction in appropriation for the District of Columbia National Guard as contained in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1934 (p. 68), as now before the House of Representatives

The items should be restored to the Budget Bureau estimates.

| Object | Appropriation, 1933 | Budget estimate, 1934 | Amount recommended in bill for 1934 | Decrease compared with 1933 appropriation | Decrease compared with 1934 Budget estimate |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Personal services | $27,150 | $24,750 | $17,417 | $9,333 | $7,333 |
| Temporary labor | 7,000 | 6,650 | 6,000 | 1,000 | 650 |
| Pay of troops | 10,000 | 10,000 | None. | 10,000 | 10,000 |
| General expenses | 14,450 | 13,000 | 8,400 | 6,050 | 4,600 |
| Total | 58,600 | 54,400 | 31,817 | 26,783 | 22,583 |

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the committee wrote this section practically under an instruction from the House. This is the exact language and these are the exact amounts carried by the bill, passed by the House, and sent to the Senate last year. We have made no changes of any kind. As a matter of fact, they are much more liberal this year than last, for the reason that the cost of practically every item provided for has greatly decreased in the meantime.

Mr. GOSS. Just one moment. Can the gentleman tell us why under the miscellaneous items he appropriates $179,000 for the Anacostia River flats, with a reduction of $6,000, as against the small appropriation of $58,000 reduced $22,000? Why did not the gentleman carry out the same proportion for the Anacostia Flats that he has carried out for the Militia of the District of Columbia?

Mr. CANNON. Of course, there is no connection between the two.

Mr. GOSS. I know that, but I am asking this to show the gentleman's inconsistency in his own argument.

Mr. CANNON. There is not the slightest inconsistency. We did not cut the militia at all. We did cut the item to which the gentleman refers. As between the two we were more generous with the militia.

Mr. GOSS. The appropriations for 1934 have been cut $6,000 out of $79,000, while there has been an actual cut here of 50 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. The cut was made by the House last year. In this bill the committee have merely adopted the amounts carried by that bill. These are the figures which the House agreed to and sent to the Senate last year. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of Georgia) there were 18 ayes and 29 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 70, line 2, strike out "$8,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$13,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 4,000 feet of 30-inch water main in Eleventh Street SE., including river crossing, from K Street to Nichols Avenue and Good Hope Road, including not to exceed $2,000, to be immediately available, for the employment of engineering or other professional services, by contract or otherwise, and without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) or the classification act of 1923, as amended, and engineering and incidental expenses, $242,000.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The exemption of this section 3709 of the classification act in this paragraph applies only to the engineers?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. So that the commissioners will be required to ask for bids and award the contract to the lowest bidder on the water main.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to allow a discount of 10 per cent on the amount of any bill for water charges paid within 15 days after the date of the rendition thereof.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order so as to ask a question. Why did the committee recommend such a liberal discount as 10 per cent if the water charges be paid within 15 days of the time when they are due?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman's question, we found that by reason of the increase in water rates made about two years ago we were accumulating a large surplus. At the present rate we will have at the end of the fiscal year a surplus of approximately $700,000 in the water fund in the Treasury. The water rates are already lower in the District than in most of the cities of the country. I have here a comparative list of rates in force in 17 comparable cities of the United States, as follows:

COMPARATIVE WATER RATES

(It is estimated that the average meter will register 9,000 cubic feet of water per year. This table indicates the amount which would be paid for 9,000 cubic feet over a period of a year in each of the cities mentioned.)

|---|---|
| Minneapolis | $5.40 |
| Cleveland | 6.00 |
| Milwaukee | 8.30 |
| Detroit | 8.38 |
| New York | 9.00 |
| Washington | 9.80 |
| Cincinnati | 10.80 |
| Columbus | 10.80 |
| Omaha | 11.25 |
| Buffalo | 12.00 |
| Los Angeles | 12.00 |
| Rochester | 12.15 |
| Boston | 13.86 |
| St. Paul | 14.10 |
| Akron | 14.40 |
| Kansas City | 14.64 |
| Baltimore | 18.00 |

It will be observed that, notwithstanding the service here in Washington is unexcelled, the rate charged the consumer is sixth lowest out of the 17 cities.

In view of the large surplus accumulating, the committee felt the rate should be lowered and asked the auditor to make an estimate and submit the minimum rate which could safely be charged. On the following day the auditor reported that a survey was in progress which would require some time to complete and suggested that reduction in rates be deferred until next year when the data from the survey would be available, and that in the meantime a rebate of 10 per cent be made for prompt payment of accounts, and that plan was adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. This provision is not reducing the water rate. It is granting a discount of 10 per cent, which is liberal, for payment within 15 days.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; we estimated that it would result in a saving to the people of Washington of approximately $200,000 for the year. Next year it is expected that a reduction can be made in the rate itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. You are giving a preferred number a lower rate, but you are not making it applicable to all.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, anyone who pays his bill within 15 days after it is due may have that discount.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know, but the poor, unfortunate fellow who does not happen to have the money on the spot can not get the benefit of the reduction. I believe this is the only instance where the gentleman is in favor of reducing the revenues of the District.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will recall that I offered an amendment reducing the rate on real estate from $1.70 to $1.50 which would have saved the home owners of the city a very substantial amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I am told by my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] that if he does not pay within 15 days his water is shut off.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, I did not say that. I said that if he did not pay his bill his water would be turned off.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not in sympathy with the idea but I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used to pay any increase in the salary of any officer or employee of the District of Columbia by reason of the reallocation of the position of such officer or employee to a higher grade since June 30, 1932, by the Personnel Classification Board or the Civil Service Commission, and the authority of the Civil Service Commission to reallocate the position of any officer or employee of the District of Columbia to a higher grade under the classification act of 1923, as amended, is suspended during the fiscal year 1934.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against section 6.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against section 6 in that it contains legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CANNON: Page 81, after line 12, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 6. No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used to pay any increase in the salary of any officer or employee of the District of Columbia by reason of the reallocation of the position of such officer or employee to a higher grade since June 30, 1932, by the Personnel Classification Board or the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this merely carries out the spirit of the economy act and applies it to everybody alike.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. The elimination of section 201 of the economy act by the Economy Committee in the Senate restores many increases in salaries. For example, take the case of the budget officer for the Navy Department. His salary will be increased over $2,000 by the elimination of that section.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is speaking of a pending amendment to the economy act.

Mr. COLLINS. I am speaking about the elimination of section 201 of the economy act, which will permit many increases in salaries, something that should not be done under any circumstances in these terrible times.

Mr. BYRNS. Is the gentleman absolutely certain that is going to be done?

Mr. COLLINS. Well, I hope the House conferees will permit it. I believe my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and his colleagues from the House can prevent its elimination. I can conceive of no act on the part of Congress that would bring it into greater disfavor than the raising of salaries of Government employees. The elimination of section 201 would automatically increase the salaries of many of the higher-paid officers. I do hope my friend [Mr. BYRNS] will vigorously oppose the repeal of this section of existing law. He is one of our most influential Members and if he makes a fight I am confident of its retention.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the regular order.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation bill, and comes within rule 13. I think this is drawn in the guise of a limitation, but it is really legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is really a limitation on the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PRALL). The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were ayes 54 and noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the argument presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], and trust there may be no repetition in my remarks of what he has already stated in the House.

Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the District of Columbia Legislative Committee, I am very happy that the amendment offered to-day by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] to provide for reinstatement of the amounts in the appropriation bill, was carried. Because of the unprecedented need in the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District asked for an appropriation from Congress of $1,250,000 for the calendar year 1933. Six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars of this has already been included in the deficiency bill for the relief of destitution until July 1, 1933. The balance of $625,000 has been asked in the regular appropriation bill to be used for this purpose, in the last six months of the present year.

If this money had not been made available, on July 1, 7,000 families, representing 28,000 persons of the District, would be faced with actual starvation. This number of families is now being carried by the emergency relief division of the Board of Public Welfare in a way entirely inadequate. An average of $3.60 a week is being allowed those families. Private funds are utterly inadequate to meet this need, and unless relief is provided from District revenues—not Federal—a very serious situation is bound to develop. Ever since 1929 the number of dependent families in Washington and the amount of relief necessary has doubled from the year before. If that situation continues in 1933 there will be needed more than $2,000,000 to care for the needy people in Washington. Congress will have adjourned before July 1, and the people of Washington will have no means of providing the necessary relief for the last half of the year. Congress, under the present form of government in the District of Columbia, is obligated to secure proper relief legislation in order that there shall be no undue suffering in the Nation's Capital. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PRALL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14643) making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1934, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the LaGuardia amendment, inserting the provision for $625,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 64, after line 9, insert the following: "To enable the Board of Public Welfare to provide for the relief of all needy persons not otherwise provided for by appropriations herein made to such board, $625,000, payable wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 50 and noes 27.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. And object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the House should adjourn now, would this be the first order of business on Monday?

The SPEAKER. Monday is Consent Calendar day.

Evidently there is not a quorum present. The roll call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 105, answered "present" 1, not voting, 154, as follows:

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], is unavoidably absent by reason of illness in his family. Were he present he would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a motion to recommit.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has not qualified as yet.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentlemen from Arkansas opposed to the bill?

Mr. PARKS. I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Parks moves that the bill, H. R. 14643, be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to the committee to report the same forthwith with the following amendment:

On page 38, strike out lines 1 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, may we have read the lines that are sought to be stricken out?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph that is sought to be stricken out be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the paragraph sought to be stricken out by the gentleman from Arkansas will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 38, strike out lines 1 to 11, inclusive, which are as follows:

"No part of the foregoing appropriations for public schools shall be used for instructing children under 5 years of age except children entering during the first half of the school year who will be 5 years of age by November 1, 1933, and children entering during the second half of the school year who will be 5 years of age by March 15, 1934: Provided, That this limitation shall not be considered as preventing the employment of a matron and the care of children under school age at the Webster School whose parent or parents are in attendance in connection with Americanization work."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were—ayes 14, noes 203.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were—ayes 209, noes 6.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESIGNATION FROM FUNERAL COMMITTEE

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be excused as a member of the committee attending the funeral of our late colleague from Minnesota [Mr. Goodwin.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints in his place the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTGAU].

SOME FUNDAMENTALS OF RECOVERY

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the address of Ogden Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, on Lincoln's birthday, delivered in Kansas City by Mr. Mills's assistant, Mr. John J. Hopkins.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. Ogden Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, delivered before the Young Republican Club of Missouri, at its Lincoln Day dinner at Kansas City, Mo., Saturday evening, February 11, 1933:

We have met to celebrate the birth of one of the Nation's great and the true founder of the party to which we owe allegiance. As here, all over the country Republicans are meeting to reaffirm their faith in their party and in its principles and to rededicate it to the service of our country.

Even in defeat we can hold our head high. History will acknowledge the high character of service rendered by the Republican Party under the leadership of President Hoover in the face of as grave difficulties as ever confronted the Nation. I venture to prophesy that the soundness of the principles which he has laid down and the policies which he has advocated will, as the days go by, receive fuller and fuller recognition. Nor am I concerned about the future of our party. Its strength and vitality were amply demonstrated last fall in the face of heavy political odds. Even in the minority it has a great function to perform. But to perform it adequately there must be unity, a sense of direction, and an uncompromising fidelity to principle.

Experience has clearly demonstrated that weakness and lack of cohesion in our parties mean weakness in government. Nothing contributes more to a vigorous administration of national affairs than a strong, well organized, and united majority party, faced by a compact and militant opposition.

We wish the new administration well. For the sake of the country I trust the Democrats may preserve the unity and harmony necessary to enact the constructive program which the circumstances call for. Certainly it is our duty to cooperate heartily to that end. In fact, the future of both parties is inextricably bound up with the resourcefulness, courage, and character which they exhibit in dealing with the grave conditions at home and abroad which threaten the well-being and progress of mankind.

It is of these conditions and some of the fundamental steps essential to recovery of prices, employment, and business activity that I desire to speak this evening.

If we look at the world situation, we can not fail to note that progressive economic deterioration has spread from country to country. The process of infection seems to be both cumulative and irresistible as long as remedial measures are confined to independent national action.

As a result it is estimated that there are nearly 30,000,000 workers unemployed. Wholesale commodity prices—expressed in gold—have declined since October, 1929, by roughly a third; raw material prices on the average by 50 to 60 per cent. In the middle of December, at Winnipeg, the price of wheat fell to the lowest level recorded in any primary market for wheat during the last four centuries. World stocks of basic products continue to accumulate. Industrial production has everywhere been drastically curtailed, particularly in the capital-goods industries. International trade has shrunk to incredibly low levels and continues to shrink, while national incomes in many countries, it is estimated, have declined by as much as 40 per cent. Almost half of the countries of the world are off the gold standard, and in some 40 countries exchange restrictions have been imposed.

This is a very brief summary of the findings of the preparatory commission of experts of the world economic conference.

In our own country we have witnessed an enormous contraction of business and commerce, a precipitous and uneven decline in price levels, a tremendous contraction of credit, widespread unemployment, and great suffering and hardship on the part of almost all those burdened with debt. While necessary readjustments continue to take place—as they have on an immense scale during the last three years—and though our people with characteristic initiative and resourcefulness are everywhere finding solutions for intensely difficult problems, suffering is so general and the future still appears so uncertain that all are longing for a sense of direction and for a program that offers a definite hope of broad improvement.

There is no dearth of programs, plans, schemes, and panaceas of every variety. Many of them serve to illustrate the confusion of thought and the lack of any generally accepted conception either as to the origin of our troubles or as to the means to overcome them. As in similar periods in the past there are many who emphasize the drastic fall in prices—without adequate consideration of the factor of maladjustment—and the weight of debts as the heart of the problem. They believe that the solution is to be found through governmental manipulation of our currency and monetary system to bring about what is commonly known as inflation. They expect to improve our competitive position in world markets by depreciation of our currency in terms of foreign currencies, and to effect an automatic and artificial rise in our prices, believing that it would of itself relieve debtors and stimulate and maintain a business revival.

They start with the unwarranted assumption that the supply of gold and money both in the world and in the United States is inadequate to support a satisfactory price level. As far as the world is concerned, since 1913, the world's monetary gold reserves have increased from nearly 5,000,000,000 to about 12,000,000,000, or nearly 150 per cent, while the production of basic commodities at the highest point of 1929 was nearly one-third larger than in 1913. As a result of a number of causes, such as the reduced cost of mining and the discovery of new deposits, the release in India of about $300,000,000 from private hoards and a decreased industrial consumption of gold, the world's gold reserves increased by about $1,600,000,000 from the end of 1929 to the end of 1932, or at an average annual rate of over $500,000,000, as compared with $270,000,000 annual increase from 1922 to 1929.

When we take into consideration the greater economy in the use of gold that can be effected through its concentration in central banks and improved banking practices, it seems clear that the world is assured of a gold reserve adequate for some years to come to support a price level much higher than that now prevailing.

As far as this country is concerned, as compared with 1929, our gold stock has increased, our bank reserves have increased, and currency has increased. The present difficulty arises from inability to put to work our ample monetary resources. Credit can not be brought into active use by brute force. The increased employment of credit depends upon an expansion of business activity, that is, the buying and selling of commodities, employment of labor, and the acceleration of all of the manifold economic activities that form part of the modern economic mechanism. Potential credit is a favorable factor to business recovery, but until the credit actually goes to work it can affect neither business nor prices. It will go to work only when the lender feels secure enough to lend, and the borrower confident enough of the use he can make of the money to borrow.

What is holding us back is uncertainty and lack of confidence. How important these factors are and how great are the vitality and responsiveness of the latent forces in our economic life was demonstrated several times during the last two years. Perhaps the most striking example was given last summer when almost simultaneously the passage of the revenue act gave assurance that the national credit would be maintained, the foreign drain on our gold reserves was brought to an end, the fear of the enactment of such inflationary measures as the Patman bonus bill was terminated, and the Lausanne agreement gave rise to the hope of greater stability and order abroad. Credit contraction ceased, prices rose, and business expanded.

There are all manner of plans for producing inflation. A discussion of one which has been rather clearly defined will, I think, serve to illustrate the fallacies and dangers underlying all of them. What I have in mind is the program for reducing the gold content of the dollar.

Frankly, I do not believe that there is any real danger of these or any similar scheme being enacted into law. We have walked up to the edge of this precipice in the past and have always had the good sense to turn back in time. On at least two occasions a determined and conclusive refusal marked the turning point in our economic fortunes. I am confident that history will repeat itself, with every likelihood of the same favorable results. I say this with all the more confidence when we consider that such action would involve partial repudiation or default by our Government; political tampering with our monetary system, which could be repeated at will; the partial destruction by legislative fiat of the savings of our Nation of hard-working and thrifty families, exemplified by the 65,000,000 life-insurance policies outstanding and $24,000,000,000 of saving deposits; an unparalleled blow to confidence, and the undermining of our entire credit structure.

What would happen if we cut the gold content of the dollar in two? And in asking this question I am waiving the immense dangers incident to the necessary period of discussion which themselves might prove catastrophic. There would be, as some suppose, no automatic and immediate change. Mortgages and debts, except possibly those debts containing a gold clause, would still be paid in the same number of dollars, and in general debtors would have the same amount of dollars with which to pay them. The wage earner would continue to receive his present wage. If we had no relations with the outside world, I think even the advocates of the plan would admit that devaluation per se would not affect the domestic price level. They believe, however, that those of our producers who sell in world markets would immediately benefit by increased returns expressed in terms of dollars, and that the higher prices received by them would ultimately be reflected in a rise in the domestic price level.

The theory is that the American farmer who now sells a bushel of wheat in Liverpool for about 3 shillings, which he now converts into about 50 cents a bushel, would, if the gold value of the dollar were cut in half, receive a dollar a bushel; and since the world price largely determines the domestic price of wheat, the price of wheat at home would rise to $1. Similarly, the importer of goods would pay more dollars for goods purchased abroad. It should be noted that this process would apply directly only to imported and exported goods, and that even from the theoretical standpoint the effect upon other prices would, at best, be sympathetic and indirect. That is the theory, and the theory would probably work were it not for one all-important factor: It is assumed that the world price level would remain constant. This is where theory and fact part company. If next Monday morning the American farmer found that he could get $1 for his wheat in Liverpool you can rest assured that every vessel leaving the United States would be loaded with wheat. The price at Liverpool would break. This is so certain that it would have broken before even an extra bushel from the United States reached that market. It is impossible to say where the price of wheat would ultimately settle, but certainly far under a dollar and probably not far above present prices. What is true of wheat would be true of all other articles that sell in world markets.

Since Great Britain was forced off the gold standard in September, 1931, British prices have shown no marked increase despite a 30 per cent depreciation in the pound. World gold prices, however, have declined by 12 per cent. Great Britain has held her price level, but there is very real ground for belief that the gold panic occasioned by the departure of Great Britain from the gold standard, the subsequent instability of sterling exchange, price cutting by Great Britain in the world markets, and her decreased imports have all combined to help drive world prices still lower.

This conclusion seems all the more probable when we consider that Great Britain's departure from the gold standard was followed by currency depreciation in a great many other countries, which either abandoned the gold standard or prohibited gold exports. These and other countries with depreciated currencies handled in 1930 over 40 per cent of the world's trade. In all of these countries exchange depreciation acted as a deterrent to imports and a bounty on exports or, in other words, their decreased purchasing power and reduced prices have exercised a two-fold adverse influence on world commodity prices.

Thus, the program would amount at the beginning to a vast price-cutting campaign against other countries. America, by cutting its dollar in half, would at first be able to undersell other countries, but the latter would be forced to such defensive measures as cutting their prices, allowing their currencies to depreciate further to offset the devaluation of the dollar, or setting up prohibitive trade barriers against American goods. In practice all of these things would happen in greater or less degree in different countries. This is not a question of theory; it is exactly what has been happening and is happening to-day to world prices under the terrific pressure exerted by depreciated currencies and the frantic efforts of the different nations to protect their exchanges and balances of payment.

The fact that the United States, France, and a few other countries have remained on the gold standard is the one element of stability in the world to-day. If this were removed, widespread disorder would become chaos. Does anyone believe that we could repudiate half the value of the dollar by deliberate choice without causing an even greater shock to world confidence than that resulting from Great Britain's involuntary action?

The consequences of other inflationary programs are not fundamentally different from those I have described. If they are to be seriously pressed, we face the decision as to whether we will seek to stimulate prices and business and to relieve the burden of debts by a domestic program of currency manipulation, a course which has always resulted in disaster, or whether we shall set ourselves with determination to the accomplishment of a few basic and essential tasks which I propose to describe and, however steep the ascent, steadfastly follow a course every mile of which has been tested at one time or another by the experience of mankind.

As I have had occasion to say before, there are two ways of viewing the fundamentals of the situation. The national economy may be viewed, on the one hand, as a relatively inert organism deprived of the forward impulse and primary motivating energies which have characterized its history in the past, requiring remodeling and artificial galvanization into activity. To one who holds this view it would appear that recovery can result only from artificial stimulation and through elaborate tinkering in accordance with some new plan intended to provide each of the necessary steps from depression to recovery. On the other hand, the national economy may be looked upon as a composite of dynamic forces constantly active, but temporarily out of adjustment and suppressed; and that in a highly organized society such as ours these powerful forces will lead to a high degree of economic activity unless there are barriers and obstacles which impede their normal operations. If this be so, the problem of restoring prosperity is essentially a problem of removing barriers.

The whole history of the United States, with its unparalleled and almost continuous growth and expansion of production and distribution, resulting, except for comparatively brief periods of recession, in a steady rise in the standard of living of our people, supports this point of view. If you chart our economic history, the rising curve of growth represents graphically the constant upward surge. In the past three years we have fallen far behind the line of growth. There have always been in the past, and there now exist, tremendous forces pushing upward toward that growth line. They take the form of unsatisfied desires of millions of the population. If these desires can only be freed from the forces which now hold them back, the resumption of growth is inevitable. The surge upward is the dominant fact of American economic life. Given an opportunity, it will reassert itself. It is our task to create that opportunity, recognizing that the puny efforts of government can never rival the cumulative power derived from the free activities and impulses of 120,000,000 Americans supported by a wealth of resources.

What are some of these barriers? The list is an impressive one: First, fear and uncertainty; second, disordered public finances and the heavy burden of public and private debts; third, unstable currencies; fourth, trade restrictions; fifth, exchange restrictions; sixth, fall in prices and a wide disparity in the price levels of different commodities, services, etc.; seventh, contracted and dislocated markets.

It is apparent that we are not dealing with separate and distinct factors but rather with the component parts of an interrelated whole; and, in the second place, that, while corrective action must be taken at home, there is an equally important field for cooperative action with other nations.

Beginning in the domestic field, the first and most essential steps are to bring the Budget of the National Government into balance, to give unqualified assurance to the country that there will be no tampering with our monetary system by political action, and to reduce the cost of our governments so as to bring early relief from excessive taxation. Business fears an unbalanced Budget and unsound monetary legislation more than anything else, and it is this fear and uncertainty rather than any shortage of money or credit which are to-day preventing recovery, credit expansion, and price increases.

But there is something more than fear involved in the budgetary problem. An unbalanced Budget is not a bogey invented by an overcautious Treasury to bring pressure on a recalcitrant Congress. It is a reality from which, in spite of all the arguments and talk, certain definite consequences flow. There is no doubt as to the importance of the credit factor in the present depression. Nor is it open to dispute that a sound and unquestioned Government credit is the corner stone upon which an unexpanded credit structure must rest. The credit of the Government can not remain sound and unquestioned in the face of recurring and large deficits. Assurance and confidence on this basic point can not be maintained by mere lip service. What is essential is clear evidence that the finances of the Government are under control, and that the Congress is determined to keep them so.

If we keep on pumping out Government securities, a point must be reached at which the question arises as to the Treasury's ability to maintain the value of its securities in the face of a constantly increasing volume. When this point is reached banks and investors hesitate to buy because of the fear of future depreciation. Interest rates will tend to rise with each new issue. Ultimately the point might be reached where central bank credit has to be invoked to support the credit of the Government, and when that point is reached we have entered the field of destructive inflation.

Higher interest rates on Government securities and continued uncertainty as to the extent of Government borrowing tend to force up long-term interest rates and to impede the free flow of funds into the bond market. This is moving in exactly the wrong direction. What the Government should and could do is through a refunding operation to reduce the interest rate on a vast volume of high-interest coupon securities now outstanding and soon callable. This large refunding operation can not be undertaken under the most favorable circumstances until the Budget is balanced. Once accomplished, not only would the Treasury save a substantial sum annually in interest, but one of the uncertainties that has been hanging over the money market for some time would be removed.

A lower interest charge on a large volume of Government securities furthermore would affect long-time interest rates. Bond prices would rise to more normal levels. This, in turn, would not only improve the position of many banks, but it would have a decidedly stimulating effect on the capital market. In a normal year about $6,000,000,000 is poured into American business through the new securities market. Given the cheapening of long-time money and an active securities market, railroads could begin to catch up on long-delayed maintenance, and business enterprises could again secure funds for accumulated replacements and new undertakings. There is no question but that the almost complete stoppage in the capital-goods industries—iron and steel, lumber, building materials, etc.—has played an enormous part in the present depression. These industries depend not on bank credit but on the market for new securities and on mortgage money. The restoration of cheap long-time money and the revival of new finance would make it possible for these industries to get underway, and there is every reason to believe that there is a vast accumulated need for all manner of replacements and repairs requiring the products of the heavier industries. It is difficult to see how there can be any real revival of the consumption-goods industries until there is some restoration of employment in the greatly depressed capital-goods industries.

We must not overlook the fact that a continuation of recurring deficits, even on a moderate scale, necessarily restricts the freedom of action with which the reserve banks can conduct their credit operations. Clearly, the continuance of the easy-money policy of the Federal reserve system is highly desirable. The open-market operations usually involved in such a policy are necessarily hampered by unbalanced Budgets, for, even though indirectly, their effect partakes of the character of mopping up Government deficits. Paradoxical as it may sound, one of the means of bringing about a condition which will permit easy money and expanding credit is a balanced Budget rather than a Government deficit.

Thus I consider adequate provision for the Federal Budget as the first step in a program for sound recovery, and I should certainly include the continuance of the easy-money policy of our reserve banks as the second. The vigorous action already taken by the Federal reserve system has had an extremely beneficial effect. It has not only arrested the progress of the deflationary movement but has resulted in some increase in deposits and loans and investments and has placed the banks in control of about five hundred million of excess reserves, furnishing the base for an expansion of bank credit of about $5,000,000,000. Some people express themselves as disappointed at the results of the open-market policy of our Federal reserve banks in stimulating a business revival. This seems to me unjustified. The time element has been too short to draw definite conclusions. Moreover, we can not ignore that other extremely unfavorable and uncorrected factors have not given this credit policy a fair chance to exert its full influence.

Incidentally, any general program of cooperation among the nations should include the closest cooperation among the principal central banks and, if possible, a concerted effort to keep credit and money conditions easy in the principal money markets of the world.

The volume of debt piled up during the period of inflation and expansion constitutes a real barrier to recovery. But there is no single debt problem. There are different categories of debts, just as there are different classes of debtors. Some debts can be paid even under existing circumstances. Others can unquestionably be paid with an improvement in business activity and a moderate rise in prices. Others, again, will have under any circumstances to be written down. Such a situation calls for selective treatment, not a general formula. This process is already taking place through such policies as have been recently announced by leading insurance companies in respect of farm mortgages and by some mortgage companies in urban centers. The legislation recommended by the President to amend the bankruptcy law by providing a legal process whereby destructive liquidation may be avoided through the composition and extension of individual indebtedness and the reorganization of corporations, with the full protection of the court extended to the rights and interests of creditors and debtors alike, is another constructive move in the right direction. Other examples of sound action could be cited, but these will suffice to indicate the broad lines that should be followed in dealing specifically with the debt problem, apart from the relief to debtors that may be expected through business recovery and price revival.

In this field it would be well that some agency with a definite standing in the community should be created to protect the rights of American investors abroad through adjustment with foreign debtor governments that find themselves unable under existing conditions to meet their obligations in full.

As I have already said, however, we can not rely alone on remedial action taken within our own borders. There is need also for a broad international program of reconstruction, to which all nations can fairly be called upon to make such contributions as lie within their power. The coming world economic conference affords an unrivaled opportunity through cooperative action to initiate an all-powerful movement toward recovery by a determined. if gradual, attack on those barriers that now present impassable obstacles to economic progress.

The experts of many nations, including our own, that have recently met, have prepared the main outline of such a program. This program contemplates a cooperative effort among the leading nations of the world to deal with four major problems: The first is the need for restoration of an effective international monetary standard, based upon a thorough study of the conditions which must be met and the safeguards which must be established in order to provide against instability or a breakdown in the future. Second, measures to bring about an increase in the level of world prices, the unprecedented fall of commodity prices in recent years having caused a growing lack of balance between costs and prices and immensely increased the real burden of all debts and fixed charges. This problem calls for an exploration not only of all possibilities of counteracting the decline in prices but of cooperative handling of unwieldly stocks of certain primary commodities which constitute a serious obstacle to improvement in the price situation. Third, the abolition of exchange restrictions as an essential condition of world recovery. Fourth, the need for reestablishing a greater freedom of international trade in order that every country, consistent with the peculiar needs of its national economy, may benefit from the interchange of commodities and services on a world-wide scale.

The war-debt question has been excluded from the agenda of the coming economic conference. However, in view of the changed conditions since the settlements were effected and the urgent request by the debtor governments for reconsideration of existing settlements, we can not ignore this problem. With good will on both sides an adjustment of this question should be possible and is clearly desirable if only in the interest of harmonious cooperation in the development of a major program. I can not undertake to discuss this question this evening, but it does seem to me that if war debts are to be reconsidered in the interest of the national economy of the debtors and of world recovery, as a matter of equity, the American people are entitled to compensatory advantages for sacrifices they may be called upon to make, and that the debtor nations can fairly be asked to make definite contributions to a common program intended to remove the barriers which now stand in the way of returning prosperity.

I believe that a balanced Budget at home; reduced cost of government; the orderly adjustment of debts; the stabilization of currencies and exchanges; an easy money policy on the part of central banks; the gradual removal of exchange restrictions, restoring the free flow of international credit; and the elimination of arbitrary and abnormal trade barriers would, if combined into a general economic program, so free latent and powerful forces as at once to stimulate on a world-wide scale business revival and price recovery, and that this time the forward movement would not be temporary and short lived but permanent and progressive.

There are those who sincerely believe that there is a short cut out of our problems through governmental action in the domestic field of a kind that inevitably involves uncontrolled inflation in one form or another.

In my judgment, creating as it will at the outset further fear, uncertainty, and loss of confidence, and entailing as it must ultimately consequences of the most serious character, any such plan is doomed to failure and will in the end but increase distress at home and confusion abroad. That is not the way out of our difficulties. It is a road to further disasters.

If instead we press forward vigorously along the vista that is beginning to open up, removing, however painstakingly, one by one the obstacles that bar our progress and hem us in on every side, I have the faith to believe that our much-tried generation will at a not distant date live to see its own errors liquidated and the younger generation look out upon a world where progress and increased well-being are once more the normal order.

SENATE ECONOMY ACT RAISES SALARIES OF MANY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, the Senate eliminated section 201 of the economy act and by doing so permitted many Government salaries to be increased, especially with certain classes of employees.

Instead of increasing salaries, the Congress should reduce all salaries by 25 per cent. The platform of the Democratic Party calls for reductions in appropriations by that amount, and Democrats should live up to their platform promises. It, therefore, is regrettable that a proposal to increase salaries should be looked upon with favor at this time. I do hope that the Democratic conferees from the House of Representatives will insist that this section be continued as the law.

On this subject I call the attention of the Congress to a letter recently received by me from Congressman-elect HOEPPEL, formerly editor of the Retired Men's News:

FEBRUARY 9, 1933.

Congressman COLLINS,

DEAR SIR: Will you please read the following facts, and if they appeal to your sense of justice will you kindly request the House conferees on the Post Office appropriation bill to consider these points in the conference.

By eliminating "201" from line 3, page 66, of H. R. 13520, as it passed the House, the Senate bill will increase the salaries of thousands of Federal employees and thousands of Army and Navy officers from $200 up to $2,675.60 per annum. For instance, Admiral McLean, the desk admiral, with the Budget, will have his pay increase from $7,000 to $9,675.60.

These increases are being taken from enlisted men receiving only $21 per month, who are cut an average of 10 per cent of their total compensation through the elimination of the enlistment bonus.

Men in the higher grades are being cut 8⅓ per cent of their pay and are not being given the furlough as is extended to other Federal employees. In other words, men of the service are given a straight pay cut. As all enlisted men have suffered a reduction in ration allowances the higher grade enlisted men are being cut three different ways and suffer an approximate total reduction in pay and allowances of 13½ per cent. This same cut affects the National Guard.

As the average pay of the seven grades of the service is only $47 and the average pay of civil-service employees is approximately $120 per month you can understand how discriminatory is this 13½ per cent cut for enlisted men, while civil employees are cut only 8⅓ per cent.

The average pay of enlisted men on the retired list is less than $100 per annum, yet these aged and enfeebled men, despite their natural infirmities and disabilities due to service, are being reduced a total of 8⅓ per cent if their annual pay is more than $1,000.

The fact that these men served long, hard years for as low as $13 per month, and that 85 per cent of them are veterans of both the Spanish American and World Wars, it appears, should operate in their behalf. Short-service war veterans receiving more compensation for similar disabilities are not being cut.

Furthermore, they receive only 75 per cent of the pay of their rank and only one-fourth of the allowances of their rank, while the law prescribes they should receive three-fourths.

As retired civil-service employees who had no hazards in service, and who receive $100 per month, contributed only $696.90 towards their annuity fund, the Senate alibi why they spared these men, should be contracted with the hazards of service of the retired military man and the low pay he received, which certainly counterbalances the total sum of $696.90 quoted above.

In addition, retired civil-service men, if veterans, do actually receive from $50 to $225 veteran gratuities in addition. The retired enlisted man is debarred from receiving two checks.

In view of this higher pay cut for enlisted men, and the discrimination existing in the economy bill between the military and the civil service retired, will you kindly ask the House conferees to strike out the pay reduction for the enlisted men?

Thanking you for your consideration, I am,

Yours sincerely,

J. H. HOEPPEL.

BRIG. GEN. THADDEUS KOSCIUSKO—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to offer a few observations on Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of whose naturalization as an American citizen is celebrated this year. There is now pending several joint resolutions which would authorize and direct the Postmaster General to issue a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents, of such design and for such period as the Postmaster General may determine, commemorative of the anniversary of the naturalization in 1783 of Kosciusko.

Kosciusko was the first foreign patriot to heed the call of the American Colonies in their struggle for freedom. Today his name is familiar to and revered by the entire country, but when he first came to Philadelphia in the summer of 1776, a few weeks after the Declaration of Independence, he was but a young military engineer. He only asked a chance to serve this Nation in attaining its objective. We all know the material with which our first army was being formed—raw, undisciplined men, unacquainted with everything that pertains to war. To such an army this young foreigner became a treasure. He threw himself into the contest with ardor and ability.

He was sent to the northern army, which was then opposing the advance of Burgoyne, and he prepared the defenses of Ticonderoga. He contributed much to the safe retreat of the northern army. Ordered to choose a new strong position, he selected the field of Saratoga, and his skill in the fortification of Bemis's Heights was an important factor in our victory at Saratoga.

Kosciusko was later sent to West Point in order to strengthen the defenses of the Hudson. He spent over two years there. His work won only the highest of praise. Concerning it, Washington said:

> To his care and sedulous appreciation the American people are indebted for the defense of West Point.

In August, 1780, Kosciusko requested a transfer to the southern army. He served well and faithfully in the difficult southern campaign. His engineering skill was commended by commanding officers.

Congress rewarded Kosciusko, tardily, with a brevet commission of brigadier general on October 13, 1783, as a token of the "high sense of his long, faithful, and meritorious services" and with the privilege of American citizenship.

In 1784 this brilliant soldier returned to Poland to serve his own country. He distinguished himself in the Polish-Russian campaign of 1792, and two years later the world resounded with his name when he assumed the leadership of the Polish insurrection. Kosciusko was imprisoned, and, after spending two years in the dungeons of St. Petersburg, he was liberated by Czar Paul I. He immediately set out for America, which he considered his "beloved country."

Before his death he once more did service to America. In 1800, in Paris, he wrote Manœuvers of Horse Artillery for the United States Army. The War of 1812 was fought by artillery in accordance with these manœuvers, and General Kosciusko, for that reason, is regarded as "The Father of the American Artillery."

Kosciusko died at Soleure, Switzerland, October 15, 1817. Gen. William Harrison, the ninth President of the United States, upon learning of this great soldier's death, exclaimed in Congress, "Kosciusko, the martyr of liberty, is no more!"

The issuance of the special series of stamps, commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of his naturalization, would be only a small tribute to pay the great Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 389

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1933

(Legislative day of Saturday, February 18, 1933)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 14643) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to suggest the absence of a quorum if the Senator from Wisconsin will yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield for that purpose?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Couzens | King | Sheppard |

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14199) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the request for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. REED, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. STEIWER, Mr. CUTTING, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the president of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the academy for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Library.

PRINTING OF RECORD IN UTILITIES INVESTIGATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission calling attention to the fact that about January 1, 1933, work stopped coming through on the printing and binding of the record in the utilities investigation, being conducted in response to Senate resolutions, and stating that the commission is informed that this publishing work has ceased due to lack of funds for its continuance, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Joint Memorial 6

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now on your calendar a House bill (H. R. 11816) having for its purpose, among other things, the conservation and protection of public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; and

Whereas the said House bill provided further for the orderly use, improvement, and development of the nontimbered public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, with such reservations as are necessary to not interfere with like lands situate in national parks and monuments and Indian reservations; and

Whereas favorable consideration and passage of this House bill will serve to foster and stabilize the livestock industry, which is now dependent upon public range: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate jointly concurring therein), That we do most earnestly petition and memorialize the House of Representatives of the United States, in the name of the State of Oregon, to favorably consider pending legislation hereinbefore referred to; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Oregon be, and he hereby is, instructed to mail a copy of this resolution to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, the Speaker of its House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the house January 31, 1933.

E. W. SNELL,
Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate February 10, 1933.

FRED E. KIDDLE,

Indorsed: House Joint Memorial No. 6 (introduced by Mr. Snider).

W. F. DRAGER, Chief Clerk.

Filed February 13, 1933.

HAL E. HOSS, Secretary of State.

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial No. 6 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state February 13, 1933, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon. Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 14th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.]

HAL E. HOSS,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, memorializing Congress not to pass House bill 13558, relative to filing of notices of location of mineral claims in United States land offices, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. PITTMAN.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, favoring the passage of the so-called Frazier farm relief bill, being the bill (S. 1197) to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness and to encourage and promote agriculture, commerce, and industry by establishing an efficient credit system, through which the unjust and unequal burdens placed upon agriculture during the period of price fixing and deflation may be lightened, by providing for the liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest through the Federal farm-loan system, the Federal reserve banking system, and the postal-savings depository system, and creating a board of agriculture to supervise the same, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented to-day by Mr. BORAH.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from Edith T. Morris, Mary L. Morris, and James Craik Morris, the Thirteenth Ward Independent Democratic Organization, Clyde Bel, president; Catherine R. Moore; the board of directors of the Consumers League of Louisiana, Mrs. Joseph E. Friend, president; Shirley Wimberly, attorney at law; Rena Crawford, M. D., and R. Williamson, M. D., and the Jackson Democratic Club, Francis Williams, president, all of New Orleans; J. B. Ardis, George W. Hardy, jr., Pike Hall, W. A. Mabry, E. Wayles Brown, Howard B. Warren, Robert G. Chandler, Harney S. Bogan, W. T. Mayo, Cecil Morgan, Joe B. Hamiter, and W. G. McElroy, all of Shreveport, and W. H. Hodges, jr., of Elm Grove, all in the State of Louisiana, praying for a continuance of the investigation of the Louisiana senatorial election of 1932, and the necessary allotment of money therefor by the special committee of the Senate to investigate campaign expenditures of the various presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1932, which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Common Council of the City of Hammond, Ind.; the City Council of Baltimore, Md.; the Common Council of the City of Hamtramck, Mich.; the Board of Aldermen of the City of Newport, R. I.; the Common Council of the City of West Allis, Wis.; and the Common Council of the City of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring the passage of legislation providing for the issuance of a special series of postage stamps, of the denomination of 3 cents, commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen and appointment as brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army of Thaddeus Kosciusko on October 13, 1783, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from Walter R. Rennecke, of Seattle, Wash., relative to intergovernmental debt settlements and corporation matters, and making certain suggestions in connection therewith, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BORAH presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Franklin Girard, secretary of state of the State of Idaho and legal custodian of the original enrolled copies of all acts passed at the various sessions of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed constitute a full, true, and complete transcript of the original enrolled copy of House Joint Memorial No. 6, enacted by the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho and filed in this office the 14th day of February, 1933.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise, the capital of Idaho, this 14th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.]

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House Joint Memorial 6 (by agriculture committee)

A joint memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled.

Received and filed February 14, 1933.

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House Joint Memorial 6 (by agriculture committee)

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas a crisis exists and hundreds of thousands of once prosperous farmers in this Nation have already lost their homes and their all by mortgage foreclosures because of the fact that the price of agricultural products has for years been below the cost of production, a condition that affects all of the people of this Nation and is largely responsible for the continuance of the depression; and

Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness and the farmers are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors; and

Whereas unless immediate relief is given, thousand and hundreds of thousands of additional farmers will lose their farms and their homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages, and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions, precipitating a condition that threatens the very life of this Nation; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress Senate Bill No. 1197, known as the Frazier bill, which provides that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Government of the United States at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds and plunging the Nation further into debt, but by issuing Federal reserve notes the same as the Government now does for the banks through the Federal reserve bank: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho, the Senate concurring, respectfully requests and petitions the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to enact said Senate bill No. 1197 in order that the agricultural indebtedness of the Nation may be speedily liquidated and refinanced and agriculture saved from utter ruin and destruction; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho is hereby directed to forward copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives of the State of Idaho in the Congress of the United States.

This house joint memorial passed the house on the 4th day of February, 1933.

ROBERT COULTER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This house joint memorial passed the senate on the 10th day of February, 1933.

GEO. E. HILL, President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within House Joint Memorial No. 6 originated in the house of representatives during the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

DONALD D. STEWART,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BORAH presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Franklin Girard, secretary of state of the State of Idaho and legal custodian of the original enrolled copies of all acts passed at the various sessions of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed constitute a full, true, and complete transcript of the original enrolled copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 4, enacted by the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho and filed in this office the 13th day of February, 1933.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise, the capital of Idaho, this 13th day of February, A. D. 1933.

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE SENATE.

Senate Joint Memorial 4 (by Kirkpatrick and Donart)

A joint memorial to the honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

Received and filed February 13, 1933.

FRANKLIN GIRARD,
Secretary of State.

IN THE SENATE.

Senate Joint Memorial 4 (by Kirkpatrick and Donart)

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas by reason of the great depreciation in the price of farm products and the inability of farmers to market the products of their farms in an amount to equal the cost of production, irrigation districts, duly organized and existing in conformity with the laws of the State wherein such districts are situate, and which districts were organized at the request of and under contracts made with the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes of management and for the purposes of collecting and paying the costs of constructing irrigation works by the Department of Reclamation of the Government of the United States, are unable to collect the assessments for the operation and maintenance of such irrigation district canals and diversion works and to pay the costs incurred in the diversion and distribution of the water to farms in such districts; and

Whereas by reason of said inability to collect such assessments and the inability of the farmers in said districts to pay, from the sale of the products of their farms, the costs of such operation and maintenance, such districts have been forced to issue and sell warrants of the districts legally issued for such expense for the year 1932, which are outstanding and unpaid; and

Whereas it will be necessary, in order to pay such operating expenses so that the farmers within such districts may be able to carry on their farms, for such irrigation districts to issue warrants for the payment of such expenses during the year 1933, which warrants can not be paid until the crops of 1933 are marketed; and

Whereas said warrants are a general lien upon the lands and water rights of such irrigation districts together with the interest thereon and are a first lien on said lands and said water rights, subject only to the lien of the Department of Reclamation of the Government of the United States for construction purposes, and will be paid as soon as the price of farm products is increased above the cost of production and the 1933 crops can be marketed; and

Whereas it is necessary that money be obtained for the operation and maintenance of said districts and to pay the cost for the distribution of water to said farms for the year 1933, if crops are to be produced on said lands; and

Whereas under the act of the Congress of the United States approved July 21, 1932, known as the "emergency relief and construction act of 1932," and the act of which it was an amendment, loans can not be made to such irrigation districts for the purposes herein provided; and

Whereas the interests of the thousands of farmers in said irrigation districts require that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans for such purpose and accept the warrants of such districts as securities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Idaho (the House of Representatives concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States of America to immediately broaden the terms of said act, by amendment thereto, under which loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may be made so as to include loans to such irrigation districts for such purpose, accepting as security therefor the warrants of said districts legally issued and registered in the manner provided by law, the payments of which, together with interest thereon, shall be guaranteed by assessments duly levied or to be levied as provided by law; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to forward certified copies of this memorial to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 6th day of February, 1933.

GEO. E. HILL,

This senate joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 9th day of February, 1933.

ROBERT COULTER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within Senate Joint Memorial No. 4 originated in the senate during the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

M. J. HAMMOND,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, favoring the prompt passage of House bill 413, as amended, to enlarge the Boise National Forest by adding thereto certain areas in Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(See joint memorial printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 15th instant, p. 4108, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. BORAH also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, urging Congress to eliminate from pending legislation (being a bill to amend sections 5 and 8 of the Idaho admission act so as to permit mineral leases on public lands to be made for a term not to exceed 20 years and to permit the further exchange and consolidation of State and Federal lands within the State of Idaho) the provision authorizing the State, in its discretion, to add a portion of the annual income to the permanent funds and, upon the elimination of this provision, favoring the immediate enactment into law of the said bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 14th instant, p. 3993, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. PITTMAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, W. G. Greathouse, the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original Senate Joint Resolution 10, introduced by Senators Winters, Carpenter, and Friedhoff February 1, 1933, now on file and of record in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State at my office, in Carson City, Nev., this 16th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] W. G. GREATHOUSE,
Secretary of State.

Senate joint resolution memorializing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation to reduce the interest rate on, and to extend the time for payment of, agricultural and livestock loans

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of Nevada, That—

Whereas the present interest rates charged by the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation in the State of Nevada are excessive under present conditions and should be lowered to at least 4 per cent per annum; and

Whereas said loans made are required to be approved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Now, therefore

The Legislature of the State of Nevada hereby respectfully requests the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation to reduce the rate of interest on all pending agricultural and livestock loans, and all future loans, to at least 4 per cent per annum, and to extend time for payment of the principal on present loans for an additional three years, and to make all future loans for not less than three years.

The secretary of state of the State of Nevada is hereby directed to transmit certified copies hereof to the president or chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to the executive officer of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation for this Federal land-bank district, and to the United States Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Nevada.

Approved February 15, 1933.

F. B. BALZAR, Governor.

Mr. PITTMAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, W. G. Greathouse, the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original assembly joint resolution No. 10, introduced by Mr. Bugbee, January 30, 1933, now on file and of record in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State, at my office, in Carson City, Nev., this 16th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] W. G. GREATHOUSE,
Secretary of State.

Assembly joint resolution memoralizing Congress not to pass H. R. 13558, relative to filing of notices of location of mining claims in United States land offices

Resolved by the assembly and the senate, That—

Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States a bill, known as H. R. 13558, which provides for the filing of notices of location of all mineral claims in land offices of the United States, and that proofs of labor on such mining claims be similarly filed, in addition to filing requirements now required under State laws, and that in case of failure to so file in the United States land offices all claims for which such filings have not been made shall be open to relocation in the same manner as if no location had ever been made on said claims, and granting the Secretary of the Interior power to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the act, and requiring the payment of such fees for filing all papers required to be filed under the provisions of the proposed law; and

Whereas as almost all of the public lands within the State of Nevada are potential mineral lands, and thousands of mining claims now located on them, or which may be hereafter located thereon, have not been and can not be so described in the location notices, that these claims could not be placed upon a map without a long, tedious, and expensive survey, much of the mineral land being as yet unsurveyed and unplatted, and as such claims are held by citizens or may be located by others who are unable to bear the expense of surveying them and paying the filing fees to be required, especially in the present economic condition of the country; and

Whereas the provisions of such proposed law by Congress are unjust and wholly unnecessary and would work great hardship upon the prospectors and owners of mining claims: Now, therefore

The Legislature of the State of Nevada earnestly protests against the passage of said bill, namely, H. R. 13558, and requests that the Senators and Representatives of the State of Nevada in Congress oppose said bill and vote against the passage of the same, and that the Congress of the United States take cognizance of this protest and defeat the passage of said bill. The secretary of state of the State of Nevada is hereby instructed to forward a certified copy of this joint resolution to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the United States Senators and Representative in Congress from the State of Nevada.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of original Senate Joint Memorial No. 1, as passed by the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming and approved February 2, 1933, at 4.40 p. m.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 15th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] A. M. CLARK, Secretary of State.
By C. J. ROGERS, Deputy.

Memorializing Congress to take favorable action on S. 1043, to confer upon the States of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho the right to tax, for State and county purposes, persons, copartnerships, and corporations, and their property within that portion of the Yellowstone National Park which lies within the boundary lines of said States

Whereas the Yellowstone National Park was created and the boundaries thereof were defined by act of Congress dated March 1, 1872, as amended by act of Congress dated May 7, 1894, and as so created and established includes within its boundaries areas of the States of Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho; and

Whereas in the act creating Yellowstone National Park and providing rules and regulations therefor no special provision has been made authorizing the assessment and collection of taxes upon property in private ownership included within the boundaries of said park; and

Whereas there now exists in private ownership a large amount of property situated within the boundaries of said Yellowstone National Park aggregating millions of dollars in value, the taxation of which would greatly benefit said States of Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho; and

Whereas the various acts of Congress establishing the several national parks, including Glacier National Park, Sequoia National Park, Yosemite National Park, Mount Rainier National Park, and Rocky Mountain National Park, each expressly authorizes the taxation of property in private ownership situated within the boundaries thereof, and no good reason exists why such law should not be applied to the Yellowstone National Park; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill known as S. 1043 to confer upon the States of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho the right to tax for State and county purposes persons, copartnerships, and corporations, and their property within that portion of the Yellowstone National Park which lies within the boundary lines of said States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, memorialized to take favorable and prompt action upon and to pass said S. 1043; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this joint memorial be sent to each of the members of the congressional delegation of this State in Congress and to the House of Representatives and Senate of the States of Montana and Idaho.

WM. M. JACK,
Speaker of the House.
ROY H. CAMERON,

Approved 4.40 p. m., February 2, 1933.
LESLIE A. MILLER, Governor.

Mr. KENDRICK also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

THE ST..TE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of enrolled Joint Memorial No. 1, House of Representatives of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original House Joint Memorial No. 4, approved by the governor on February 16, 1933, at 8.55 a. m.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1933.

Memorializing the Congress of the United States to immediately enact legislation regulating interstate commercial motor-vehicle traffic

Whereas the ever-increasing burden of traffic by commercial motor vehicles operating for gain and profit upon the highways presents a serious situation; and

Whereas it is entirely clear that the highways are public property, that their primary and preferred use is for private purposes, and that their use for purposes of gain is special and extraordinary; and

Whereas it is vitally important to the State of Wyoming that traffic by commercial motor vehicles shall be so regulated that the burden thereof with its resulting injuries to the highways, its interference with the primary use thereof, as well as the danger and inconvenience resulting to the citizens of the State shall be properly adjusted to the interests of all classes of citizens; and

Whereas such regulation should be designed to foster a fair distribution of traffic, to the end that all necessary facilities of transportation shall be maintained and the public shall not be inconvenienced by the extraordinary and unlimited use of the highways for purposes of gain and profit; and

Whereas such regulation through legislative enactment by the State of Wyoming can result only in the regulation of such traffic upon the highways within this State and can not properly accomplish such regulation with reference to such traffic which is interstate in character; and

Whereas it is necessary, in order to make any such regulation by legislative enactment of this State effective, that there shall be enacted by the Congress of the United States legislation regulating interstate traffic by commercial motor vehicles upon the highways: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the twenty-second legislature (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, memorialized to immediately enact legislation regulating interstate traffic by common-carrier motor vehicles upon the highways and the business of operating such vehicle upon the highways for gain and profit, and to the end that the burden of such traffic with its resulting injuries to the highways, its interference with the primary use of the highways, the danger and inconvenience resulting to the citizens shall be properly adjusted to the interest of all classes of citizens, and that all necessary facilities of transportation shall be maintained and the public shall not be inconvenienced by the extraordinary and unlimited use of the highways for the purposes of gain and profit; be it further

Resolved, That certified copy of this memorial be addressed and sent to Senator ROBERT D. CAREY, Senator JOHN B. KENDRICK, and Hon. VINCENT CARTER, Representative in Congress for the State of Wyoming.

ROY H. CAMERON,
WM. M. JACK,
Speaker of the House.

Approved 8.55 a. m., February 16, 1933.
LESLIE A. MILLER, Governor.

Mr. KENDRICK also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of Enrolled Joint Memorial No. 2, House of Representatives of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original House Joint Memorial No. 3, approved by the governor on February 16, 1933, at 9 a. m.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1933.

Memorializing the National Park Service to maintain the public roads in Yellowstone National Park, so as to permit winter travel thereon

Whereas the roads traversing Yellowstone National Park are not now maintained for winter travel; and

Whereas there are highly developed highways which converge through Yellowstone National Park, all of which are open for constant use during the winter but are barred from use for transcontinental travel by reason of the failure of the National Park Service to maintain its highways so as to permit winter travel; and

Whereas the distance from Chicago to San Francisco would be shortened by 500 miles and the distance from Chicago to Portland would be shortened by 1,500 miles for winter traffic if the roads of Yellowstone National Park were maintained for winter travel; and

Whereas there are thousands of the motoring public who make the trip between the places above designated and intermediate points during the winter months and that by reason of the lessening of mileage if winter travel were possible through Yellowstone National Park, they would be able to save millions of dollars annually; and

Whereas there are thousands of people who are desirous of viewing the canyon, falls, hot springs, and geysers of Yellowstone National Park in their winter beauty; and

Whereas the main routes of travel through Yellowstone National Park are protected by timber, making them easily kept free from snow and safe for transcontinental travel during the winter months; and

Whereas greater snowfalls than are prevalent in Yellowstone National Park are removed from high passes in the States of Colorado, California, Washington, and Oregon, thereby proving that winter maintenance is possible and feasible in Yellowstone National Park; and

Whereas there is no other short stretch of highway now closed for winter travel that would command as much thereof as the one via Yellowstone National Park; and

Whereas by the collection of the fee charged for entering the park the National Park Service would receive sufficient to pay the expense of snow removal and winter maintenance and also afford winter labor for many now unemployed; and

Whereas many other national parks are kept open during the entire winter months: Now, therefore, be it hereby

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring), That we hereby memorialize the National Park Service of the United States of America that they take such favorable, necessary, and prompt action as will result in the annual winter maintenance of highways in Yellowstone National Park; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this house joint memorial be forwarded to the Wyoming Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States and to the Director of the National Park Service.

A bill (S. 5674) to provide for the issuance of stamped money certificates, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NATIONAL AND STATE BANKING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution and have it referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and because of the interest in the subject I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 256) authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency shall have and may exercise to such extent as he deems advisable with respect to national banking associations any powers which the State officials having supervision of State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies in the State in which such national banking associations are located may have with respect to such State institutions under State laws now in force or hereafter enacted: Provided, That nothing in this joint resolution shall be construed to extend the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency under section 5155, as amended, of the Revised Statutes, with respect to the establishment of branches of national banking associations.

Expenses incurred by the Comptroller of the Currency in the exercise of such powers may be assessed by him against the banks concerned and, when so assessed, shall be paid by such banks.

Nothing herein shall be construed to impair any power otherwise possessed by the Comptroller of the Currency, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Federal Reserve Board.

All powers conferred herein shall terminate on March 3, 1934.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 14643) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONTINUANCE OF INVESTIGATION OF THE FEDERAL FARM BOARD

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 364), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 42, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to April 11, 1932, directing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make an investigation of the activities and operations of the Federal Farm Board, is hereby continued in full force and effect until the expiration of the Seventy-third Congress.

COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS RELATING TO THE WOOD-PULP INDUSTRY

Mr. DILL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 365), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Tariff Commission be, and is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Senate at as early a date as possible the competitive conditions as they relate to the wood-pulp industry of the United States, and particularly in relation to pulp timber, pulpwood, and mechanical and chemical wood pulp produced in Canada, Sweden, Finland, and Norway, said investigation to be based upon the costs in the various countries as computed on the standard gold value of United States currency used in payment for labor and other costs in domestic industry.

The commission is further directed to make such use of the data and findings of the United States Conservation Board, which has conducted a complete survey in the domestic field of the pulp business during the past few years, as will be useful in making its report to the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that on the 18th instant the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1858. An act for the relief of Harriette Olsen; and

S. 4166. An act for the relief of James M. Griffin, disbursing agent, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes.

ADDRESS BY GEN. JOHN R. KING ON LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD an address delivered on Lincoln's Birthday over a national broadcast from Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D. C., February 11, 1933, by Gen. John R. King, past commander in chief, Grand Army of the Republic.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, whenever the patriotic citizens of any nation join in tribute to the memory of those who were willing to sacrifice themselves for a conception of public duty, the whole human mass moves forward in the way of brotherhood.

As past commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, I am profoundly grateful to the National Broadcasting Co. and the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States for this opportunity to extend the hand of comradeship and brotherhood to those of our younger comrades of the war with Spain, the World War, and all other campaigns and expeditions under the flag we love so well.

It is eminently fitting and proper that this program should be dedicated to the ideals and principles that characterized the life of Abraham Lincoln. To-night, on the eve of the one hundred and twenty-fourth anniversary of Lincoln's humble birth in the backwoods of Kentucky, there is a special significance in the knowledge that we, as a united Nation, can still find courage and inspiration in his words and teachings.

To-day, under the stress of world-wide economic disturbances and widespread suffering, humanity in general is sorely in need of the healing hand of Abraham Lincoln. He was a man who belonged to the people; whose view on issues pertaining to the public welfare was tempered with tolerance and sympathy for the masses; one who possessed a deep sense of loyalty to the inherent rights of individuals and a wholesome regard for the well-being of those who were prepared to sacrifice themselves on the altar of patriotism.

To-day, due to circumstances brought on by an economic upheaval, there are those who would ignore and forget the teachings and principles of patriotism, and appreciation of service as emphasized by Abraham Lincoln. Veterans as a class have become the target of insidious and underhand attacks. Motives that are utterly selfish have inspired certain cliques and groups to vent their spleen upon the veteran and his dependents, irrespective of the service, sacrifice, and sufferings they have been willing to undergo as loyal citizens of this Nation.

In reply to these critics of the veteran, I take the words of Abraham Lincoln, when he said, "Neither let us be slandered from our duty by false accusations against us nor frightened from it by menaces of destruction. * * * Let us have the faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it."

As past commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, I hereby pledge the prayers and energies of our organization to the cause of veteran unity. We are old in years but still young in spirit in this fight against those who would exploit the veteran in the name of false economy. We have no patience for those who would weigh the value of mere dollars against the welfare and happiness of human beings.

To the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, in its glorious defense of veteran legislative benefits already enacted, I pledge the loyal aid and support of our fast-fading ranks. To the people, as a whole, we who survive in the ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic commend the ideals and principles espoused by the Great Emancipator when he called upon a united people, following the Civil War, "to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and orphans."

May God make us worthy of the memory of Abraham Lincoln!

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that on to-day the House passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

FEDERAL AID FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5125) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the issue presented to the Senate between the substitute offered by the Senator from New York and the Costigan-La Follette bill is clear-cut. Every line of the substitute, beginning on page 3, line 17, down to and including line 5 on page 9, was adopted to the pending bill last Friday. These are the provisions of the Wagner substitute which deal with loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for public works. The first part of the substitute, to be found on pages 1 and 2 and down to line 17 on page 3, deals with funds to be made available for the relief of destitution. They provide for a continuation of the present policy of loaning money or making advances to the States, to be deducted from future Federal highway appropriations. These deductions are to begin in 1935. All that the substitute offered by the Senator from New York does, in so far as relief of the unemployed is concerned, is to raise the authorized limit of such loans to $600,000,000 and to change the pauper's oath which the governors must now make by omitting the phrase in the existing law requiring a declaration that there are no resources within the State to meet the problem.

WAGNER SUBSTITUTE WILL CONTINUE PRESENT DISGRACEFULLY LOW RELIEF STANDARDS

There remains about $133,000,000 of the $300,000,000 authorized for loans and advances for relief of destitution in the bill passed last year. Therefore it is fair to say that the Wagner substitute does nothing to raise the prevailing standards of relief being given to the unemployed and their dependents. It proposes to continue the disgracefully low levels of subsistence which are forcing a degradation of millions of men, women, and children spiritually, mentally, and physically in the United States to-day.

THE COSTIGAN-LA FOLLETTE BILL

The Costigan-La Follette bill on the other hand provides $500,000,000 to be given as a grant in aid to the States to meet in part the burden of direct unemployment relief. This fund is to be raised by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and will be administered by a Federal emergency relief board of three persons to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, two of whom shall be experienced in public relief and welfare administration.

Mr. President, I ask for order in the Chamber. I ask that Senators who are not interested in the misery of millions in the United States retire to the cloakroom to carry on their conversations.

The VICE PRESIDENT (rapping for order). Senators will please be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The fund proposed in the bill is made available as rapidly as it may be needed. Forty per cent of the total, or $200,000,000, is, according to sections 4 (a) and (7) of the bill, to be apportioned according to the population of the various States, Territories, and the District of Columbia. The maximum amounts available to individual States and Territories on this basis are shown in the following table, which I ask be incorporated as a part of my remarks and which are to be found in the report of the Committee on Manufactures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

| State | Population | Amount |
|---|---|---|
| United States | 124,746,573 | $200,000,000.00 |
| Alabama | 2,646,248 | 4,242,598.32 |

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, to provide an incentive to a maximum of effort on the part of the States and localities, payments to any State on the population basis in any one calendar year are, under section 4 (a), not to exceed two-thirds of the amounts made available for relief from all sources within the State.

The VICE PRESIDENT (rapping for order). Senators will please be in order. Senators desiring to carry on conversation will please retire to the cloakroom.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The remainder of the Federal contribution, or $300,000,000, except for necessary administrative expenses, which may not exceed $350,000, is, according to sections 4 (b) and 8, together with any portion of the fund allotted on the basis of population but not used, according to section 4 (c), to be allotted to the States and Territories and the District of Columbia to the extent that local needs are not covered by local and State funds and the funds obtainable upon the population basis.

Not to exceed $15,000,000 of the amount reserved for allotment in accordance with need may be used, under subsections (b) and (c) of section 8, to assist the States in establishing relief programs for transients who have no legal claim on the State or the local community in which they happen to be. Those provisions of the bill embody the essential provisions of the bill (S. 5121) to authorize cooperation by the Federal Government in relieving distress among unemployed needy transients, also referred to the Committee on Manufactures. The evidence taken by your committee shows that action by the Federal Government is imperative to meet the problem created by the ever-increasing number of men, women, and boys who are wandering about the country looking for work. And, in my judgment, Mr. President, the $15,000,000 provided is adequate to deal with the transient problem that now confronts the country.

Full responsibility for the allocation of funds under the Costigan-La Follette bill is by section 3 vested in a Federal emergency relief board of three members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and to continue in existence for a period of two years. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under sections 2 and 9, is in effect designated as the board's fiscal agent. The corporation is directed to make to the States the payments certified from time to time by the board, and is authorized to sell additional bonds or debentures to the extent that this may be necessary to cover the expenditures of the relief program.

The procedure to govern applications by the States for grants is set forth in sections 5, 6, and 10. The bill avoids all implication of centralization of relief or Federal coercion of the States by explicitly stating in section 12 that it shall be construed—

> To secure to the several States control of the administration of relief * * * within their respective territorial limits—

And in section 5 (b) that—

> Relief shall be administered within each State under rules and regulations adopted by the State authorities.

It is fully recognized that this bill is in no sense a solution of the economic problems which have created the need for unemployment relief. It is urgent, however, that hunger, disease, discouragement, and permanent degradation be checked until effective measures for economic recovery can be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has asked for order. Let the Senate be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope that the interruptions of this nature will remain in the RECORD, so that the millions of persons now ground down to the level of paupers may understand that in the highest legislative body in this land there is no interest in their suffering or their degradation.

SHRINKAGE OF RELIEF RESOURCES—PUBLIC AND PRIVATE

There are between twelve and fifteen million unemployed persons in the United States to-day. We are in the fourth winter of the depression. The longer it lasts the greater the load becomes upon relief. This is due to two causes. The exhaustion of the resources of the individual and the shrinkage of resources, public and private. Funds raised from private sources rose tremendously in the early stages of the depression; but, despite heroic efforts, they are rapidly becoming an insignificant factor. Available statistics indicate that private funds are now meeting only about 12 per cent of the burden. In my judgment this does not reflect an unwillingness to be generous. It is due primarily to diminishing income and to some extent to the fact that private contributions are more readily available to meet an emergency, but tend to decline when the need extends over a period of years.

We have no accurate figures as to the number of families now on relief, but Harry L. Hopkins, chairman of the Temporary Relief Administration of New York State, testified that 300,000 families would require relief in that State this year. Upon the basis of his experience he estimated that 10 per cent of the population, or 3,000,000 families in the country, would require relief from public funds in 1933. Walter West, executive secretary of the American Association of Social Workers, estimates that between three and three and one-half million families are now on the destitute level and require relief.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation had, early in January, made loans or advances to 36 States and 2 Territories, which represent about 52 per cent of the population of the United States, but does not include New York, New Jersey, the five New England States, California, Maryland, Delaware, Nebraska, and Wyoming. In November last, according to Mr. Croxton, there were 2,300,000 families estimated to be in need of relief in the area referred to.

The mounting burden is shown by the Children's Bureau figures from 125 reporting cities, embracing 25 per cent of the population. In January, 1931, these cities had 450,000 families on relief; in December, 1931, there were 696,000; in November, 1932, 892,000; and in December last 997,000 families were receiving assistance in these 125 municipalities. New York City also shows the same increase in load: November, 1930, 27,000 families; November, 1931, 108,000; November, 1932, 178,000. Chicago has had a like experience: November, 1930, there were 16,500 families on relief; November, 1931, it had jumped to 97,000, and in November, 1932, it had reached 161,000. In that month there were 75,000 families down-State in Illinois, making a total for the State of 230,000 families entirely dependent on public relief. In Pennsylvania there were in December, 1931, 165,000 families on relief; in May, 1932, 235,000; and in December, 1932, 397,000 families in the State of Pennsylvania were on public relief. The load in that State is rising at the rate of 40,000 families per month.

Data received from 44 cities in 25 States and analyzed by H. L. Lurie, of the Bureau of Jewish Social Research, shows that 25 per cent of the unemployed in those cities are receiving relief.

FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND FAMILIES IN THE UNITED STATES ARE DESTITUTE

But let no Senator get the impression that all those who are in need are receiving even the meager assistance now being given to those in want. Mr. Hopkins, in charge of the relief in New York State, estimates that there are 500,000 families in the United States in destitute circumstances who are being denied relief because the available funds are inadequate to meet the need. There are, for example, estimated to be 30,000 families in New York City alone, the richest city in the world, who are in need, but who are unable to secure relief because of lack of funds. This is not a wild guess. It is made by Mr. William Hodson, executive director of the welfare council in that city.

Since the substitute offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] proposes to continue the present basis of relief in this country, it becomes pertinent to make a brief survey of the standards of relief that prevail in the richest country in the world. Relief does not meet the minimum standards set up by competent authorities as necessary to sustain life and preserve health and morale. I have time to cite only a few examples. Mr. Hodson testified:

> We have not been able thus far to provide adequate relief. We have prevented families from starving to death and have met, in part, the most urgent distress. Beyond that we have not attained a standard which is adequate.

Mr. Samuel A. Goldsmith, executive director of Jewish charities in Chicago, testified:

We have been engaged in a great biological experiment in Illinois. We have been experimenting with the minimum amount of money and food that will keep people fairly healthy.

Calvert Estill, director of public welfare in West Virginia, tells the story in a few words:

The funds available both from Federal and local sources have been just about sufficient to maintain the families and keep them from starvation; nothing except food, practically no clothing, and no rents.

I asked him about medical care. He answered:

In the first grants made in 1932 we permitted the same medical and hospital services on a case basis; that is, if the case was in all respects eligible to assistance. In the grants that were made to us for the year 1933 in the resolution adopted by the corporation (Reconstruction Finance Corporation) there is a provision to the effect that it is understood that funds are not available for medical, hospital, or institutional services.

The relief given to-day does not even reach the standards set up to aid the victims of disaster. Again I quote from Walter West, of the American Association of Social Workers:

We had had some disaster-relief experience which we applied and that we are applying now, unfortunately. Our disaster programs were proper following a tornado or fire or flood. We had learned to bring in supplies and hand them out, register the afflicted and the persons who had been dispossessed, and we have been able to apply those systems quite adequately in particular local places. But those systems of relief are not the kind to meet the needs of families which have to be relieved month after month and year after year.

We have made it necessary for those families to live on inadequate food allowances on which they might be able to live reasonably well for a week or two, but without the variety that is absolutely necessary in a year's or a month's diet. We have left them every month with uncertainty and a fear of being dispossessed. We have given little clothing, although we always provide clothing in disasters. We do not provide medical care through a central relief agency, although we give it in disasters. We are cutting off lights and giving inadequate heat. Our relief programs are not even as adequate now as in any disaster relief program of which I know.

The estimate for needs in Illinois by the State commission is $92,000,000 for 1933. According to Samuel Goldsmith this is on a disaster basis. He said:

It fails to recognize that no one has ever experienced a prolonged "disaster" for three or four years. We are simply keeping people alive in this situation.

Even these standards, disgracefully low as they are, are being lowered. I refer to the testimony of Mr. Lurie again.

In a large number of cities which give food relief through commissaries and grocery orders adequate standards of diet are not being maintained and increasingly even the supplying of food relief is taking on the character of emergency rations. It is obvious that such methods of relief may prove disastrous to health and morale as the emergency period lengthens into years instead of months. Very rapidly with diminishing funds it is becoming increasingly true that the efforts of relief agencies do not go much beyond the objective of seeing that "nobody will starve." * * * The supplying of food, however, is the only item of relief being given regularly in practically all of the cities. Payment of rent, clothing, fuel, light, and medical care are being given on an emergency basis—that is irregularly and to only a fraction of the unemployed."

A commission appointed by the Governor of Rhode Island recently reported:

It is especially important to recognize that there is a great difference between the amount which is needed to protect a family against desperate hunger for a few days and the amount that must be provided to carry a family for months on end. A food order for $2 or $3 prevents starvation, and for $5 a week the food needs of a family may be met for several weeks. * * * But where no provision can be made for reestablishing the flow of income of the head of the family, the absolute minimum to hold the family intact (five persons) is about $10 per week.

PRESENT RELIEF ON SEMISTARVATION BASIS

Senators who vote for the substitute bill are voting to maintain the present semistarvation basis of relief. In the time-limit I can give only a few examples, but they are all too typical.

Mr. Lurie, in referring to the reports from the cities he had studied, found that the relief ranges from as little as $5 and $6 a month for food relief in Florida, supplemented by a few miscellaneous items, such as wood, flour, and vegetables, to $10 and $12 per week for a family of five persons in some of the cities of medium size that have more adequate funds. In general, he reported to the committee, between $15 and $20 a month per family would be the total average relief. He estimated that if a minimum budgetary standard including food, clothing, rent, light, heat, and medical care were to be given, it would be necessary for cities concerned in his report to double the present total relief expenditures.

I cite a few examples: Stamford, Conn., grocery orders of $3, $4, and $5 per week; Grand Rapids, 50 cents per person per week; Cleveland, $4.40 per week; Toledo, $3 per week; Dallas, $1.40 for one day's work per week; Seattle, $4 per week; Cincinnati, $4 per week; Philadelphia, $4.54 per week; Pittsburgh, 90 cents per week per person. In the State of Pennsylvania the usual weekly family grant for food in December last was between $3 and $4. The maximum was $4.50 per week, regardless of the size of the family. In West Virginia the average allowance per week to the needy and distressed has been between 70 and 80 cents.

It hardly needs further argument to demonstrate that the standard of relief has been lowered beyond the danger point. Of course, it means undernourishment, not only for adults but for children. Doctor Appel, of the State Health Department in Pennsylvania, reports an alarming increase in undernourishment of school children. It has risen from 10 per cent three years ago to 28 per cent to-day. Lack of funds for shoes and clothing is not only causing suffering among the adult unemployed, but in many instances children are unable to attend school. Mr. Pickett, of the Friends' committee, reports that warm clothing is practically nonexistent in the coal-mining areas where he has been at work.

The lack of sufficient funds has made it impossible for the agencies to supply fuel except in emergency cases. The meager funds do not allow for the payment of light and gas bills. The testimony is replete with statements that the use of kerosene and candles was resorted to because it was cheaper. In Chicago Miss Edith Abbott, a member of the relief administration, reported many cases where water has been cut off for lack of payment of water bills, although this is contrary to the sanitary code of the city.

The inadequacy of relief funds has resulted in an almost universal policy of paying rent only to prevent eviction, and in many communities rent is only paid to secure new quarters for the family for one month. This policy has resulted in overcrowding. It has contributed greatly to the ever-mounting tax delinquencies in cities, thus diminishing the resources of those cities. It is not at all uncommon for landlords who own considerable rental property to be forced to apply for relief because they have no income, due to inability to collect rent. The overcrowding is producing behavior and delinquency problems which are a menace to family life.

Doctor Billikopf estimates that there are 50,000 families who have not paid rent for periods ranging from six months to two years in Philadelphia. Mr. De Schweinitz estimated that 43 per cent of the families receiving relief in Philadelphia had moved at least twice in the last year. Speaking of the situation in Chicago, Miss Edith Abbott said:

The policy of the relief offices is to pay one month's rent in advance to get the family in a new flat. Then the story begins all over and over again, and families move and move. We have had families that have moved as many as ten times in a year. * * * I remember one little boy in court (renters') and who was very much surprised and a little disturbed by it, and he said, "We are just like gypsies, always moving all the time." And that situation, as I have said, is very demoralizing to children.

FAMILIES MUST NOW BECOME PAUPERIZED BEFORE RECEIVING RELIEF

Now, do not think, Senators, that even this semistarvation relief that is being provided in the United States is being given just because people are unemployed. Oh, no! It is given only after the applicant has been carefully investigated, and it has been found that he and his family have been stripped of all their worldly possessions. To my mind, the period of pauperization through which a family must pass before it is considered eligible to receive any relief at all is one of the most appalling aspects of the situation.

Hear Mr. Lurie on this point:

Homes are lost, insurance is canceled, aid from relatives and friends has been terminated, families are forced to exhaust and destroy indefinitely their credit before relief is granted to them. This statement on the degree of destitution reached before relief is granted is applicable in practically all communities.

I ask the Senators within the sound of my voice to picture what this means. You lose your job. Your savings keep the family going for a time. When they are gone, you borrow on your insurance. When it lapses you move to a 1-room flat. You borrow from your relatives and friends. You stand off the butcher and the grocer and the milkman until they will give you nothing more for your wife and children to eat. Finally, after months of anguish and despair, you apply for relief; and after a careful investigation you are granted a food order for $4.50 per week. And this is all. No rent is paid unless you have been evicted from your shelter. There is no money for medical care or medicine except in emergency cases. The light is cut off. Gas is disconnected.

Perhaps the water will be shut off, too. There is no provision for clothing or shoes unless you are in dire straits, and then only secondhand cast-offs. I ask you, Will you ever be the same man again? Will your wife ever be the same woman again? And your children, what chance will they have in the future?

I say to you that by your failure to provide adequate relief to these citizens you are charging up a bill to the future in social problems and in problems of rehabilitation, the cost of which staggers the imagination.

The testimony shows that men who have been through this process of degradation and have had to subsist on these low levels of relief are no longer capable of a full day's work. Their physical stamina and their skill are gone. Time only will demonstrate whether it can ever be regained. To-day there are 3,000,000 families, or a tenth of the population, on this level; but the number is mounting at the rate of hundreds of thousands a month. Unless the standards of relief are raised, what is to become of the vaunted skill and productive capacity of the people of this country? Have you considered the permanent damage to the children who suffer malnutrition and are warped in body and mind?

In the passage of the emergency relief and reconstruction act last year we recognized that the Federal Government had a responsibility for unemployment relief, but we did not provide any contribution from the National Government to discharge it. We extended the facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and permitted it to act in the capacity of banker, loaning funds to the States and municipalities to meet the staggering burden of destitution relief.

RELIEF A NATIONAL PROBLEM AND RESPONSIBILITY

Regardless of the theories relating to the responsibility of the various governmental units in coping with the relief problem, the evidence now shows without doubt that unless the Federal Government assumes a part of the burden, relief will break down.

I have never been able to see upon what ground it can successfully be maintained that the problem of unemployment relief in a nation-wide economic collapse is solely the responsibility of State and local governments. Modern civilization has created an entirely different problem than existed before the industrial revolution. The theory that relief is only a local responsibility has become embedded in our thinking and our law because before the industrial revolution poor relief was administered in England by the village. The specialization and integration of industry have resulted in its concentration. Relief becomes in part a national problem and responsibility just as our industrial organization has become nation-wide in character.

It must be obvious that the concentration of industry and commerce has been attended by a like concentration of wealth and income. How can the financial burden of relief be carried alone by the local communities under such circumstances? It may be argued that the States with the greatest concentration of wealth and income are the States that have the heaviest burden of relief, but it requires only a casual study to demonstrate that the State governments are in no position to tap the resources in their respective jurisdiction. Five States—Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and California—have 36 per cent of the wealth of the Nation. New York has made a heroic effort to meet the problem of unemployment relief, and yet to-day the richest State in the Union finds it necessary to appeal to the Federal Government for assistance.

The same situation is presented in States where the wealth and industry is concentrated in a few counties. Would anyone contend that because of this situation the State had no responsibility and must not act to tap, in so far as possible, the resources of these counties to provide for unemployment relief in the other sections of the State?

Even though taxes are collected in certain particular States, they are derived from the products of the Nation as a whole. Take internal-revenue receipts as an example. About 54 per cent is collected from the five States just mentioned. These taxes include income, estate, distilled spirits, and tobacco. For an illustration, take the revenue from cigarettes: About 62 per cent is collected in North Carolina. It just happens that North Carolina has become the center of the cigarette industry. Can anyone claim that this revenue is due to the wealth or income of that State? Of course not! It is produced by cigarette consumption all over the United States.

To those who still cling to the theory that relief is a local responsibility I answer that we are no longer confronted by theories. We are confronted by the most appalling total of human misery in the history of any country in the world. Municipal resources are inadequate to meet the problems any longer. Take the situation of 279 municipalities, given your committee. They have raised their levies for relief from $42,000,000 in 1929 to $87,000,000 in 1932. During this period tax delinquencies in those cities have been rising at an alarming rate.

In other words, as the load increases, the resources to meet it decline. If we permit these two curves to go on separating for an indefinite period only bankruptcy and default will result. In the meantime other services rendered by these local units of government are impaired. Health, fire, and police protection and the operation of schools are threatened. To continue the present system of relief as proposed in the Wagner substitute will in the end contribute to a breakdown of municipal government. In the Senator's own State the municipalities can do no more, and have already petitioned the State for an increase in the proportion of the burden now assumed by the Commonwealth.

The same situation concerning resources is confronting the State governments. Like the cities, the States are largely dependent upon real-estate taxes for their revenue. Senators may ask why they do not turn to other sources. The answer is that in many of them there are constitutional restrictions which are not amendable except by a long process. There are constitutional restrictions on tax rates in 21 States. There are 16 States in which the State government is prohibited from loaning its credit to the local governments. There are 15 States that can not classify property taxes because of constitutional provisions.

TESTIMONY OF MAYORS

In a questionnaire sent out to the mayors of cities I asked the question as to whether the problem of relief could be met unless the Federal Government made an outright contribution to meet the situation. Of the more than 1,000 mayors, approximately, who answered, 616 mayors answered "no." Their cities have an aggregate population of over 24,000,000. I regret I can not take time to go into the other questions, but I ask to have the summary of their replies, together with a copy of the questionnaire printed at the conclusion of my remarks (Exhibit A).

One hundred mayors gathered here in Washington last week and adopted the following resolution:

Be it further resolved, That we recommend that the Federal Government assume a larger measure of financial responsibility in meeting the problems of unemployment relief of the Nation, and we do recommend that such additional Federal relief funds as may be necessary and as are appropriated by Congress be made on direct grant basis to the municipalities of the Nation.

FEDERAL COOPERATION A SPUR TO LOCAL AGENCIES

The argument will no doubt be made that a contribution by the Federal Government will lessen the activities of private agencies, local and State governments. This has not been our experience with other Federal-aid legislation. On the contrary, the participation of the Federal Government has without exception in every instance acted as a spur upon the contributions of State and local governments. I need only mention the results in Federal aid for roads, vocational education, eradication of pests, and maternity and infancy care to give but a few of the examples. The experience in the various States that have contributed to the unemployment relief funds likewise demonstrates that action by another governmental unit does not result in the local governments shirking their responsibility. The same argument that is made in the Senate to-day against the pending bill was made in the States against action by the State governments—that is now made against action by the Federal Government; and yet in New York State the opposite result has been demonstrated. I quote from the director of relief in the Empire State, Mr. Hopkins, who was appointed by President-elect Roosevelt:

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have you amplify your statement that the funds provided by the State of New York did not result in any relaxation of activity on the part of cities and counties. Many persons have criticized any action by the Federal Government based on the theory of grants in aid, on the ground that it would cause the cities, counties, and States to wash their hands, so to speak, of the relief problems, throwing it all on the Federal Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, that certainly has not happened in New York. Why it has not happened, I think, is probably due to two reasons. In the first place, when the States come to the assistance of the local community the problem is so acute, it is right on the public officials' necks in the towns and cities; therefore, they do not stand on ceremony and say, "We will not do our share, and if the State does not come in we will not take care of them." They have to take care of them. The second reason, I think, was the policy of the State to say, "We will help you; we will go a long way with you. If you are bankrupt and broke, we will finance the whole business," as we have done. We talked with the public officials and put this relief plan on the ground of a great public service, and we found that the bankers and public citizens in the various cities are more than willing to meet us halfway.

I am convinced that the Federal Government, with half a billions dollars a year, could get a similar amount from the cities, counties, and States throughout this country. I think it is a matter of how the relief funds are administered.

Mr. Stanley P. Davies, associate secretary of the State Charities Aid Association of New York, had this to say on this matter:

In our own experience, the bringing of the State to the aid of the cities and towns in meeting relief did not result in the cities and towns unloading on the State. The offer of the State funds on a reimbursement basis served to get the localities to do things they otherwise would not have done. The result was that the State moneys did not supplant but supplemented the local funds.

The CHAIRMAN. Would or would not a Federal grant in aid be helpful in putting over other bond issues in New York?

Mr. DAVIES. We feel a Federal grant in aid would be helpful in putting over another bond issue; yes. Last fall we had some difficulty in dodging the question as to why New York State did not appeal to the Federal Government for a loan before floating the bond issue. If in floating another bond issue we could say the Federal Government is doing its share, but in order to do our part we must do certain things, I think it would be easier.

Mr. President, I have not the time to cite the numerous case histories which are in the testimony of your committee showing the impact of this frightful situation upon families in the United States formerly self-supporting, self-respecting—families that were the very backbone upon which our civilization rests. I can only appeal to Senators to read that testimony. It dramatizes and gives flesh-and-blood significance to the appalling figures of the low standards of relief which I have submitted for consideration here to-day. A vote for the Wagner substitute will be a vote to continue the degradation of millions of American families in the United States.

Mr. President, we can no longer shirk our responsibility by hiding behind theoretical governmental divisions which are no longer applicable to our modern industrial civilization. In the roll call on the Wagner substitute we must answer the question as to whether or not millions of families—men, women, and children—are to be degraded to pauper levels, creating problems of rehabilitation and of social damage on a scale the like of which the world has never experienced before. A vote for the Wagner substitute is a vote to continue the process of pauperization for millions of persons in this country. Three million families, under the existing system, which the Wagner substitute proposes to continue, have already been ground down to this level. Millions more caught in the clutch of circumstances for which they have no responsibility and over which they have no control are rapidly being crushed and degraded.

Mr. President, I choose my words and I weigh them carefully when I say that under the existing standards of relief which the Wagner substitute proposes to perpetuate the fiber of the Nation is being weakened. The family unit, upon which our civilization has been builded, is crumbling and breaking under the strain. These men, these women, these little children—their fate rests in your hands. They have asked for bread. I plead with you not to give them stone.

EXHIBIT A

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES,
December 24, 1932.

DEAR SIR: In the opinion of some of the Members of the Senate, many municipalities are finding it difficult, if not impossible, this winter to continue to meet the mounting burden of unemployment relief, even with the assistance now available to them. To help us in deciding upon proper Federal policy in this emergency, will you let me know at once—

1. What increase there has been in the number of unemployed persons assisted in your city, compared with December, 1931? With December, 1930?
2. How much have the city appropriations for the unemployed increased this year over 1931? Over 1930?
3. In your judgment, how many additional persons will need relief during the winter months?
4. Can your community care for all who will need relief?
5. What proportion of the emergency burden is being carried by private relief agencies? How much have their expenditures increased compared with 1931? With 1930?
6. Can you state the amount of relief given weekly to the average family (two adults and two children)?
7. How are you meeting the problem of the transient unemployed in need of relief?
8. Is your city in a position to float further bond issues in the event that your present income is insufficient to meet adequately the relief needs of the community?
9. Do you anticipate action by your State government to give sufficient assistance to the local communities in meeting unemployment relief this winter?
10. In your judgment, can the unemployment relief problem be adequately met unless the Federal Government makes an outright contribution and cooperates with the State and local governments in meeting this problem?

I shall appreciate any additional information, comment, and suggestions you may care to make.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr.

[The material in this report was obtained from answers to a questionnaire sent to mayors of cities. About 1,070 answers have been analyzed.]

Question No. 1. What increase has there been in the number of unemployed persons assisted in your city compared with December, 1931?

|---|---|
| Increase to 49 per cent | 198 |
| 50 per cent to 99 per cent | 161 |
| 100 per cent and over | 225 |
| No change | 31 |
| Decrease | 15 |

Referring to the last item, "decrease," in one or two instances this decrease can be traced to some seasonal occupation which will last for a few weeks.

The decrease can also be traced to the fact that a city has no funds with which to care for the unemployed this year, and hence has taken no census of such persons, and during the year some of the unemployed on last year's list have moved away.

A city may also report "no change" in the number of unemployed when, having no funds with which to care for them, this year's census has not been taken.

Another reason for the report "no change" since 1931 is that in 1931 all the employable persons in a community were out of work; there have, therefore, been none added to the list of unemployed in 1932.

It should be noted, however—and this will be brought out in answer to the next question—that though there is no change or even a decrease in the number of unemployed, it does not follow that the same amount of money will care for the same number of people this year—savings and all sources of part help having been exhausted.

The following few excerpts from answers to the questionnaire bear on the number of unemployed in various parts of the country:

"Thibodaux, La.: I wish to state that about 75 per cent of our laboring people are demanding relief."

"Gardena, Calif.: The condition of unemployment, particularly among the men registered and known as 'stabilization men' is becoming acute. We have had five men called for work in this section since the 15th of September, 1932, and it would seem that some assistance will have to be given the hungry or the country will be faced with a serious situation."

"El Dorado, Ark.: We have registered throughout the county heads of families seeking employment, up to the close of the day December 29, 4,300. In December, 1931, we had approximately 2,200 unemployed throughout the city and county. In December, 1930, there were comparatively few wholly without jobs. Most of our people at that time were working part-time jobs or jobs of any kind."

"Waukegan, Ill.: From 20 to 25 per cent of population requires help."

"Bettendorf, Iowa: Over a third of population receiving help."

"Eureka, Kans.: Twenty-five per cent of population on relief."

"Dunkirk, N. Y. (population 17,800): Four thousand wage earners out of work."

"Wewoka, Okla.: Has 2 men out of employment for every 1 employed."

"Brackenridge, Pa.: Fifty per cent of population is being aided."

"McAllen, Tex.: Twenty per cent of people in destitute circumstances."

"Ada, Okla.: Seventy-five per cent of wage earners out of employment."

The percentage of increase in unemployment in 1932 over 1930, as reported by 554 cities, is as follows:

|---|---|
| To 49 per cent | 137 |
| 50 per cent to 99 per cent | 132 |
| 100 per cent and over | 285 |

Question No. 2. How much have the city appropriations for the unemployed increased this year over 1931?

|---|---|
| Increase to 99 per cent | 166 |
| 100 per cent and over | 123 |
| No change | 39 |
| Unable to make appropriation | 21 |
| Because of tax delinquencies, no money | 21 |
| Decrease | 22 |

In answering the questionnaire those cities receiving such appropriations from county or State, or from some other source, have in most cases not reported the amounts received.

In general, the last three items could be traced to tax delinquencies. Many letters, in which the amounts received for care of the unemployed are not given, say that there is no money to be had from former sources. It is clear that not only the city treasuries are without funds but that all sources from which this help has been coming in a great many cases are dry.

Following are a few excerpts bearing out this fact—that tax delinquencies are responsible for the lack of appropriation in many localities:

"Ladysmith, Wis.: Due to delinquent taxes, the county has no cash and 40 per cent of the city taxes are delinquent (1932), and even with a decrease in valuation from $4,000,000 to $2,500,000, we will likely have 50 per cent delinquent tax for 1933, for factories have not operated and people must have work to pay taxes."

"Beaver Dam, Wis.: Had 512 property holders who could not pay their taxes for 1932, and from present indications may have over 1,000 delinquents for 1933."

"Smithville, Tex.: Our city is in worse shape financially than it was in 1930; taxes are remaining unpaid, and we have not been able to so arrange our budget so that current bills can be paid, * * * neither can we take care of the resident unemployed."

"Hays, Kans.: This city is in debt now $655,000 and the taxes are not being paid."

"Battle Creek, Mich.: We asked last August for $2 per $1,000 on a tax valuation of $62,000,000 for poor relief, but on account of a large delinquency we are about 20 per cent short of the amount asked."

Even though many cities report an increase in appropriation for care of the unemployed, making the amount available for relief two or three times what it was last year, these same cities report that they will be unable to care for those who will need relief in their communities this winter and the rest of the year. In spite of the fact that the increase in appropriation is larger than the percentage of increase in the number of unemployed, this is still true. Last year there were many receiving only partial relief—they had a little money in bank, or were perhaps being helped by relatives and friends. Banks have closed and these other sources of help are depleted, and they are now compelled to ask for full relief.

The following excerpts bear on this:

"Conneaut, Ohio: Requests for relief in our city are increasing at a rapid rate, due not so much to increased unemployment but rather to the fact that our people have used up all their resources, including bank accounts and canceled insurance policies."

"Orange, Mass.: We anticipate that many families have been living on their savings, which have become exhausted, and in a very short time they will have to be added to the welfare list."

"Pecos, Tex.: The unemployment in our community is not greatly increasing, but need for relief has been, because of the fact that numbers of our people have exhausted all their resources, on which they have been enabled to maintain themselves until now."

"Taylor, Pa.: Our only bank closed June, 1932, and those who could help and were willing to help are now penniless."

A few of the answers refer to the money received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Following are a few excerpts concerning this:

"Del Rio, Tex.: Under the present program of work relief, as administered by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, we are not receiving sufficient funds to adequately care for all of our unemployed."

"Berkley, Mich.: In my judgment, the unemployment relief problem is being met, though rather inadequately, through loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation."

"Key West, Fla.: The amount of relief being given weekly to the unemployed families by the unemployment relief fund received from the State through the Federal agencies amounts to $2 per month for families of 2, $4 per month for families of 3 or 4, and $6 for families of 5 to 13."

"El Dorado, Ark.: We are endeavoring to give a family * * * two days' work each week for $1.50. * * * The fund we have received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to this time is not sufficient for us to give more work."

"Denver, Colo.: We have been told by the agent of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that none of this money can be used for administration and, also, that it may be used only for food, fuel, and clothing. This does not meet the problem of rent, cash allowances, transportation, etc. The procedure for handling this is cumbersome and inadequate."

"Raymond, Wash.: The special provisions of the emergency construction highway projects or the emergency relief and construction act of July 21, 1932, has not helped us, though we have several projects under way here. The contractors have too many loopholes through which they may hire their labor from the outside, yet we have plenty of experienced and common laborers in our community who are willing workers and must have work or be given charity."

"Seattle, Wash.: The present Reconstruction Finance Corporation regulations concerning public works limiting Federal aid to self-liquidating projects makes it doubtful if the State of Washington can take advantage of this type of Federal aid to any large extent in the near future."

A few cities in speaking of a Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan suggest that it may be difficult to repay the loan.

Question No. 3. In your judgment, how many additional persons will need relief during the winter months?

Question No. 4. Can your community care for all who will need relief?

Seven hundred and three cities report that they will have an additional burden of persons needing relief, without definitely specifying the number.

Four hundred and ninety-seven state definitely that they will be unable to care for all who will need relief.

Seventy-nine can not care for those who will need relief without help.

Eighty-nine are doubtful as to whether they will be able to care for them.

Twenty say they can do this after a fashion, but not properly.

Two hundred and forty-six say that they can care for those who will need help.

In the latter category, of course, are many counting on aid from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Of the above number answering the fourth question, 931, it may safely be said that 685 cities will not be able to care for all those who will need aid this winter.

That this large percentage of cities unable to care for those in need is typical of the condition of cities all over the country is borne out by the excerpts attached to this report.

In connection with the assertion of some cities that they can care for all who will need relief, it would be interesting to know what they consider adequate relief. Many of those saying that it will be possible to care for all are paying a weekly allowance to a family of four which is a good deal less than the average of $4.25.

Question No. 5. (a) What proportion of the emergency burden is being carried by private relief agencies?—

|---|---|
| Up to 49 per cent of the burden | 321 |
| 50 per cent to 99 per cent | 169 |
| 100 per cent | 71 |
| None | 112 |
| Small proportion | 71 |
| Large proportion | 9 |

(b) How much have their expenditures increased compared with 1931? With 1930?

1931

|---|---|
| Up to 49 per cent | 141 |
| 50 per cent to 99 per cent | 87 |
| 100 per cent and over | 124 |
| Decrease | 64 |
| No increase | 40 |
| Small increase | 13 |
| Large increase | 3 |
| None of burden carried | 68 |

1930

|---|---|
| Up to 49 per cent | 131 |
| 50 per cent to 99 per cent | 82 |
| 100 per cent and over | 112 |
| Decrease | 38 |
| No increase | 19 |
| Small increase | 4 |
| No burden carried | 23 |

Even with the increase of expenditure by private agencies, this relief is quite apparently not sufficient. With the augmented need for help over last year, in many cases funds are already exhausted, with no prospect of collecting a sufficient amount to cope with the situation. In many cases it will be impossible to collect any more at all from private sources.

The following excerpts from answers to the questionnaire bear this fact out:

"The family welfare bureau and the community chest are very active and are doing a great work, but finances are so limited that they can not take care of the situation." (Prichard, Ala.)

"In regard to private relief agencies, every effort is being made to bolster them up, but they are practically swamped." (Redondo Beach, Calif.)

"Private relief agencies are taking care of many, but the drain on these has increased to such a point that their funds are getting low." (Walsenburg, Colo.)

"The emergency committee has closed due to lack of funds." (Augusta, Ga.)

"A small percentage of the burden of relief is being cared for by private charity. * * * During the winter of 1931–32 there was collected approximately $4,000. Six hundred dollars of this amount was lost in closed banks." (Twin Falls, Idaho.)

"In view of the fact that the income of the majority of our citizens who are still employed as industrial workers has been reduced from 30 to 75 per cent, it is therefore impossible to consider any program of private subscriptions for relief." (Waukegan, Ill.)

"The Red Cross has done a great deal in relieving hardship, but now their activities are greatly curtailed because of inability to raise funds." (Clinton, Ind.)

"Community relief has heretofore been furnished by voluntary subscription. In the fall of 1932 these funds ran out." (Cumberland, Md.)

"Our funds so far have been raised by private subscriptions, but they are already exhausted and we are throwing up our hands." (Fredericktown, Mo.)

"This community has heretofore cared for those who needed relief by popular subscriptions, * * * but this means of raising money is being exhausted." (Glendive, Mont.)

"There is very little relief from private agencies, as our residents are not in a position to aid—most of them are only existing." (Ridgefield, N. J.)

"Town people are at end of their resources to aid." (Alamogordo, N. Mex.)

"We have vastly increased our local charities to help feed and clothe the unemployed, but now, as this has been going on for three years or more, we have about exhausted these resources and many of those who helped charity in 1930 are now asking for charity and help for themselves." (Edenton, N. C.)

"All of our private relief funds are depleted and no way to raise any more." (Cordell, Okla.)

"Voluntary relief has become very nearly exhausted and we are almost wholly dependent upon State aid now. This is due to the fact that the number of private contributors has grown less and the number needing aid has grown larger." (Ford City, Pa.)

"The treasuries of all private relief agencies in this State are practically depleted." (Central Falls, R. I.)

"All relief is from private subscriptions, which are about exhausted." (Lebanon, Tenn.)

"Various private relief organizations * * * have for some time past made considerable expenditures for the purpose of meeting the terrific unemployment situation and resultant misery prevalent in this community. The officials * * * or at least most of them, report well-nigh complete exhaustion of their relief funds, with little or no possibility of further adequate contributions for relief purposes." (Antigo, Wis.)

"All private agencies exhausted." (Benwood, W. Va.)

Question No. 6: Can you state the amount of relief given weekly to the average family (two adults and two children)?

Of the 873 cities answering the question, the aggregate of their weekly allowances to a family of four amounted to $3,728.77—giving an average of $4.25.

In many cases this allowance is in a grocery order. Sometimes it is given in return for work, paid for at rates varying from 75 cents to as high as $2.50 a day.

To this amount there should be added, often, old clothes, medical attention, sometimes rent and fuel, etc.

On the other hand, in many cases less than $4.25 is the total amount of relief given to a family of four.

Question No. 7. How are you meeting the problem of the transient unemployed in need of relief?

One hundred and seven cities report that they are not meeting it at all.

Fifty-eight give work relief.

One hundred and ninety-five report a small amount of temporary relief.

Ninety-one give a meal or two or some other temporary relief and order the transient to move on.

Thirty-five do nothing but order the transient to move on.

Forty-two endeavor to provide transportation to the next city, to home, or place of destination.

Six report that they give aid to the transient and charge the expenses back to his legal place of residence (one city reports that all but 5 per cent of money spent in this way has been collected).

One hundred and forty-eight report the problem cared for by the Salvation Army, Red Cross, or some similar agency.

Eighty-nine report that the problem is a small one with them.

Sixty-nine report that they have no such problem at all.

The tenor of practically all the answers to this question is to the effect that the transient is helped just as little as possible and then sent on his way. In two or three places some provision in the way of work camps or shelters has been made.

Those cities reporting work relief, a small amount of temporary relief, and help by the Salvation Army, or similar agency, usually give a meal or two, perhaps a night's shelter (occasionally two nights), and in some cases, though rarely, a little gas.

A strong effort is made everywhere to get rid of these transient unemployed just as soon as is possible, for, as some of the cities state, they can not even take care of their own unemployed.

Attached are excerpts from over 600 cities reporting on this question.

Question No. 8. Is your city in a position to float further bond issues in the event that your present income is insufficient to meet adequately the relief needs of the community?

Seven hundred cities report that they are not in such a position.

Twenty-nine are doubtful as to their ability in this regard.

Five state that they can not float bonds to any great amount.

Two hundred state that they can float bonds for such a purpose.

Six say that they do not need to float them for this purpose.

Many of the 200 stating that they are in a position to float further bond issues—or that they may for such a purpose—state that even though they would be permitted to do so, that it would be difficult to get an affirmative vote for this, and, moreover, that there would be practically no market for them.

Question No. 9. Do you anticipate action by your State government to give sufficient assistance to the local communities in meeting unemployment relief this winter?

Four hundred and thirty-four cities do not expect such assistance.

Eighty-six are doubtful as to receiving it.

Thirty-eight think they may receive some, but not adequate, assistance.

Two hundred and seventy-three do expect sufficient assistance from the State government.

Thirteen expect the assistance through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Under the answers to question No. 2 will be found excerpts from letters which speak of the manner in which Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds are being handled, etc. One city speaks of the length of time it takes to obtain such funds—so long that they can not serve the purpose for which they were intended.

Question No. 10. In your judgment can the unemployment relief problem be adequately met unless the Federal Government makes an outright contribution and cooperates with the State and local governments in meeting this problem?

| | Aggregate population |
|---|---|
| 616 answer "no" | 24,342,455 |
| 35 are doubtful as to the answer | 549,893 |
| 7 want Federal help, but not outright contribution | 78,771 |
| 5 think the Federal Government should cooperate | 88,003 |
| 11 state that the State or Federal Government must help | 130,438 |
| 3 must have the cooperation of the State | 30,858 |
| 6 can get along temporarily without such help | 57,412 |
| 5 do not approve of aid by Federal Government | 75,469 |
| 202 can get along without a Federal contribution | 2,009,575 |
| 8 can get along with Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds | 115,489 |

Following are some excerpts which bear on this question:

"The Federal Government has an obligation to contribute directly and to act at once to bring material assistance to State and local governments." (Tulsa, Okla.)

"It will be impossible to meet the unemployment relief problems unless we receive the aid of the Federal Government and State cooperation. The survey made by the city-relief committee for the necessary money needed for 1933 estimate that this county will be short $1,750,000." (Alliance, Ohio.)

"The winter is almost over here and if State aid does not come in 60 days it will be no help. At present there is nothing being done in our State legislature to relieve our unemployed. We feel here that if the Federal Government does not do something for the unemployed situation soon that we may have trouble. Relief agencies have just about used all their resources and the towns and counties can not help much longer, so something must be done very soon to relieve those who are in need." (Coalinga, Calif.)

"Unless we have immediate relief from Government sources we will all be asking for help." (Nogales, Ariz.)

"I do not believe the unemployment relief problem can be adequately met without contribution from the Federal Government and cooperation with the State and local governments. The reason

I say 'outright contributions,' particularly with local and city governments, is that there are a good many cities incorporated under the State law which provides that loans can not be made excepting upon a vote of the people." (San Fernando, Calif.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, as indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin in his powerful and moving address, on the final vote to be taken this afternoon there will be one, and only one, real issue. It is whether America chooses to help our millions of blameless victims of unemployment through scientific and carefully supervised grants to the States, guided by expert and humane men and women, as proposed in the Senate bill before us, or whether Federal aid is to continue, as provided in the pending Wagner substitute, in the form of unsatisfactory loans to States and cities. The controversy over this question and the insistence on loans are alike extraordinary. For many months similar loans have not saved us from poorly administered, unstandardized, and, for the most part, cruelly inadequate relief.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in what respect the Costigan-La Follette bill sets up any different standard for distribution of funds, what complaints States have made that they were denied the funds applied for? I am mystified at the particular kind of criticism the Senator is making of my substitute.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I trust that my analysis will prove clear. If not, after I have concluded there should be an opportunity to answer the Senator in detail. There is no disposition to avoid his question, but, as the Senator is aware, the allotted time is limited, and it appears best to complete my affirmative statement first.

Let no one be deceived. America has not been taking care of countless numbers of our fellow citizens, who are wretched sufferers from our four winters of economic collapse; and under the Wagner substitute we are asked to proceed further along the same relief path of miserable failure we have been traveling. The Senator from New York, whose name is identified with admirable efforts to improve industrial conditions, will hardly defend his substitute, except on the ground that it is the best he can secure from this Congress and our present President. He is thoroughly aware of failures of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the relief field. He discussed them in the Senate last December. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has given us no assurances that it will do its relief task better if given further funds, and the loan provisions of the law hamper it in that respect if it were so disposed. Indeed, many of us have been until this moment hoping against hope that the Senator from New York would join our demand for better, wiser, more humane legislation, represented by the pending bill, which the Senator from New York has declared he is willing to support if his substitute is defeated.

It is absurd to challenge the intelligence of the Senate on this subject. The Senate is informed. It knows what it is doing, and nothing is more certain than that the substitute should be defeated. The precise question before us of properly administered relief was voted on here a year ago after prolonged discussion. It was left undecided in February, 1932. It was revived in the following July in the unfortunate, inferior, and compromise loan form, which is before us again to-day. Thinking men and women condemned the loan provisions then, as ever since, and are unyieldingly opposed to perpetuating them through the pending substitute of the Senator from New York. In enacting that legislation we turned our humanitarian task into the hands of bankers, who were acting as loan makers usually do at an hour when the public interest demanded instant and adequate relief. To-day, therefore, we are once more here, fortified again by irrefutable and heart-breaking evidence and by expert judgment, pleading not emotionally but under the stern dictation of facts for a finer, sounder, and juster treatment of stricken men, women, and children. So grave and fundamental are the issues that they should stir all of us, who value our country's traditions and possibilities, to immediate and more adequate remedial efforts.

Turning to the problems raised by unemployment, and dealt with in the pending bill, I think it perhaps best to summarize at the outset certain conclusions, before reviewing as concisely as limited time permits, certain parts of the supporting evidence. The course is simplified because it is no longer necessary to cover the entire field. It is my task to supplement what has already been outlined by the Senator from Wisconsin to clear the way for an early and decisive vote.

The following are some of the main conclusions on the pending bill and the relief situation which are supported by the testimony of undisputed and expert witnesses:

First. Unemployment in the United States has increased by leaps and bounds since the stock market collapse of 1929 until conservative figures of the totally unemployed now reach approximately twelve million men and women, twice the number idle a year ago, which itself represented a great increase over the preceding year. Far-reaching part-time unemployment has intensified the resulting misery and unrest. The distress—like the causes from which it springs—is nation-wide, and the persistence and growth of the problem have shocked and alarmed those most familiar with ordinary unemployment.

Second. The human toll exacted by present conditions is indescribable. Because of lost earnings families have been and are being scattered, and individual members left undernourished, with their happiness destroyed. An army of unemployed, unwelcome and uncared for, is wandering up and down the highways and by-ways of our country. Yet local relief for known neighbors, without provision for strangers, is our traditional and expected practice. Child life has been infinitely impoverished and saddened. Mental depression, malnutrition, illness, semistarvation, starvation itself—at times concealed behind fatal disease and collapse—are torturing those who are not in any wise at fault.

Third. During our continuing crisis, which has all the human aspects of a major disaster, like earthquake, flood, or fire—prolonged through years—inadequacy has naturally resulted in private and public efforts to cope with the emergency. The proportionate decline of generous charitable contributions has necessitated increasing dependence on public grants, local, State, and Federal. To-day public funds constitute 90 per cent of human relief now being granted, in place of 70 per cent little more than a year ago. The part played by community chests, the Red Cross, and other volunteer agencies is a diminishing fraction of the total picture.

Fourth. The breakdown of private resources has been widely accompanied by inability of local governmental agencies to meet present need. The appeal for relief, long ago passed city halls and State capitols and brought its imperative and unavoidable summons to Washington. The national aspects of the tragedy are both certain and urgent. No local community in fairness can be asked to assume an undue part of our national burden. Transients wandering over America by hundreds of thousands; homeless men, women, boys, and girls adrift; American citizens in general, in dire need and on the verge of extreme and growing want, can not be safely disregarded by a country, grounded in principles which recognize the dignity of the human soul and the fundamental importance of all men's right to life, liberty, and happiness.

Fifth. The compromise relief measure, adopted by Congress last July as an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, has been administered—in part because its provisions appear so to require—from the viewpoint of bankers rather than humanitarian organization and efficiency. Doubtless the best evidence of that fact is that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] one of the authors of that imperfect measure, has with fine frankness declared his present conviction—which the friends of the pending bill foresaw a year ago—that the relief features of the law should be removed from that corporation's control, and placed in independent and expert hands. Nor should we longer be told that the loan provisions of the act of 1932 are in any way sacred, since the Senator from New York has at last joined us in urging that, at least in the case of transients, provision should now be made for relief by the Federal Government in the form of outright grants to the States.

The abandonment by the Senator from New York of certain provisions of the law he favored last year is entirely justified. Having parted company with Reconstruction Finance Corporation management, our hope has been that he may now take a further step and support the informed judgment of those most expert in this field in advocating the repeal of the loan features of the act of 1932 and the substitution of outright relief grants to the States by the Federal Government, to be matched as far as possible, by States, but in case of unmet necessity to be extended, whether matched or not, as provided in the pending bill of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and myself. When authorizing these grants to the States, Congress should also authorize such cooperation between the Federal board and the States as will guard the wise expenditure of the funds through competent persons, and will assure economical and humane relief for those who must be assisted.

Sixth. In other respects the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is fundamentally unsuited to grapple with our immediate relief problem. The loan provisions of the present relief law have kept various States from applying for Federal funds, notwithstanding the existence of widespread suffering, and at least semistarvation, within their borders. In addition, some cities, like Detroit, in States which, at least for a time, failed to apply for Federal loans have been obliged to offer their securities as collateral in such amounts as to strain, and in a measure destroy, municipal credit, and thereby weaken the credit of municipalities generally. Furthermore the relief extended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has usually been fed out in short-time advances, preventing long-time planning, and arousing such anxiety and fear among those dependent on help that demonstrations threatening public violence have followed. Even worse, the aid provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been so meager and has varied so radically in different places, that the sense of security, which has been encouraged in the public mind, is without foundation.

Seventh. Separate provisions are necessary in our relief laws for special attention to the needs of transient and migratory boys and men. This subject is appropriately treated in the bills of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], both of which look to Federal supervision of civilian camps in which wholesome activities and rehabilitation may be given sound direction. The provisions of these two bills have been substantially incorporated in the pending bill. It should further be noted that the pending measure plans to use an independent and expert supervisory board, not incorporated in the substitute of the Senator from New York, and to resort to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation merely as the source of the necessary funds to be authorized. The pending bill for these reasons may be considered a combination of the most desirable features of the various legislative relief proposals of Senators CUTTING, WAGNER, LA FOLLETTE, and myself.

Eighth. The grants required for anything approaching proper relief, if supplemented as planned by equal amounts raised from local, State, and other sources, will exceed the amounts heretofore appropriated or otherwise provided except in the pending bill. While the bill sponsored by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and myself calls for substantial Federal funds to prevent starvation and relieve semistarvation, America must recognize that, compared with war costs, the amount is small, and that our Nation is at this hour in the midst of a war on depression which it is our duty to wage ceaselessly along the whole economic front.

Turning to the actual testimony, let us look first at the evidence before the Committee on Manufactures on the extent of unemployment in the United States and related human needs.

Doctor Billikopf, the efficient and humane executive director of Foundation for Jewish Charities in Philadelphia, gave the following figures showing the growth of unemployment:

|---|---|
| 1930 | 4,860,000 |
| 1931 | 5,600,000 |
| October, 1932 | 12,000,000 |

President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, pointed out that the federation on January 7, 1933, estimated total unemployment in the United States at 11,590,000, a figure which has since been increased by the federation, according to press reports, to 12,000,000.

Donald Richberg, the noted general counsel of the Railway Labor Executives Association, stated that in 1923 the number of railroad workers in the United States was 1,900,000, and that their positions had been lost in the following tragic numbers: In 1923–1929, 200,000; in 1930–31, 550,000; in 1932, 100,000; a total of 850,000, leaving but 1,050,000 still employed, and representing a final loss to date of from 45 to 47 per cent.

These and other prominent and qualified experts further testified as follows:

Mr. Hopkins, administrator of New York State emergency relief, said that 250,000 families out of about 1,000,000 families without income in New York State, were receiving relief in January, 1933. He predicted that the number needing aid will be increased to more than 300,000 families during the present year. Mr. Hopkins further testified that in the Nation 3,000,000 families will require relief this year.

Mr. Bane, director of the American Association of Public Welfare, testified that the number of families in New York receiving relief last July was 100,000.

Mr. West, executive secretary of the American Association of Social Workers, estimated the families now being helped in the United States at from 3,000,000 to 3,500,000. He added that 459,483 families, under the figures of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, needing help are not receiving it, and wholly disagreed, therefore, with the testimony of Mr. Croxton that no persons have gone hungry. He further called attention to Mr. Hodson's testimony that 30,000 families are in need of relief in New York, and are not receiving it.

Mr. Estill, director of public welfare for West Virginia, reported that in Kanawha County, W. Va., alone, out of 9,600 applications for relief, only 6,000 were granted, and that there was not sufficient help to investigate the others. He added that medical care had been abandoned in that county.

Mrs. Tyson, representing the Pennsylvania Department of Welfare, testified that about 2,000,000 persons are unemployed in Pennsylvania at this time. A year ago last summer the total for Pennsylvania was estimated at about 1,100,000.

Mr. Lurie, New York, director of social research work, testified that in 43 cities relief is being given to 3,000,000 persons, 650,000 families, and 100,000 homeless individuals.

Mr. Goldsmith, Chicago, director of Jewish charities, states that in Chicago 800,000 to 850,000 are out of work, representing two-fifths (40 per cent) of the total employable. He further stated that in Illinois 10 per cent are receiving help of 40 per cent out of work. He gave the following figures of unemployment in Illinois:

|---|---|
| 1930 | 265,123 |
| January, 1931 | 756,739 |
| October, 1932 | 1,049,000 |
| January, 1933 | 1,400,000 |

Doctor Billikopf quoted the New York Times as having pointed out that the estimated unemployed in Detroit early this year was 350,000 out of potential wage workers numbering 689,000, and that the total number of families dependent on charity for food, clothing, and shelter in Detroit increased from July 1 to December 1, 1932, from 23,341 to 32,640 families, or about 100,000 individuals.

Doctor Goldstein, of New York, read into his testimony reports from the four great industrial States, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York. For Illinois he quoted Mr. Carl Borders, general secretary of the Illinois League for Industrial Democracy, who confirmed the above figures of about 1,400,000 unemployed, representing two-fifths of the number normally employed. The statement added that practically all relief funds since February, 1932, had been from State and Federal sources; $20,000,000 Federal and $19,000,000 State, and that relief standards are below normal.

A report from Doctor Rubinow, who has been associated with the State unemployment-insurance commission, was to the effect that the unemployed in Ohio are more than 30 per cent, with a pay-roll shrinkage from nearly $2,000,000,000 to less than half since 1929. The State was reported in a well-nigh desperate position with from 400,000 to 500,000 in the State, out of a population of 7,000,000, supported from private and public relief funds. The annual relief budget of $20,000,000 represents, according to this report, only a drop in the bucket in comparison with wage losses.

Mr. Rieve, president of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, reported for Philadelphia that the unemployed are estimated to exceed 1,200,000 which is over 34 per cent of the total working population of Pennsylvania. The State relief fund of $2,000,000 permits probably about $1.50 to $2 a week to families needing aid. In Philadelphia the number of families receiving relief is reported between 50,000 and 60,000.

In New York State Doctor Goldstein reports that unemployment has increased within the last year from 25 to 30 per cent and that in some industrial centers 50 to 60 per cent of the workers are out of work all the time. In the State as a whole 1,500,000 men and women are reported wholly without work. This does not include men and women who are working part time and losing from two to four days a week. He estimates that the State-wide need will require at least $144,000,000 this coming year if each family in need is allowed $10 per week. On this basis New York will need Federal aid to the extent of $84,000,000 " if the unemployed are to be saved from further destitution and collapse."

Confirming in substance other testimony about Pennsylvania, Mrs. Helen Tyson, of the State department of welfare at Harrisburg, gave the following figures on unemployment in Pennsylvania:

|---|---|
| April, 1930, United States Census | 325,402 |
| November, 1932 | 1,099,841 |
| May, 1932, estimated Pennsylvania families on relief | 250,000 |
| December, 1932, estimated Pennsylvania families on relief | 397,279 |

with monthly additions to relief of 40,000 to 50,000 families. In the State as a whole 30 per cent of the workers were said to be unemployed.

In 12 counties in southwestern Pennsylvania, according to Mrs. Tyson, 143,000 families, or about 700,000 individuals, were on relief in December, 1932, not including thousands of workers " who have one day's work in two weeks or one day a week—far below the minimum standard of living."

Mrs. Tyson further stated—> that in the near future there is every probability that half a million families, or 2,000,000 individuals, will be receiving relief from public funds in Pennsylvania.

She added:

> Nowhere in the State to-day is relief adequate. The usual weekly family grant for food in December was between $2 and $4. The maximum grant is $4.50. In Pittsburgh 90 cents a week for individuals is given. It is evident that this amount can hardly keep body and soul together.

Mrs. Tyson spoke of this as " prolonged semistarvation."

Let us turn next to the relief amounts expended.

Mr. Hodson gave the following figures for amounts spent by private agencies:

|---|---|
| 1930 | $5,285,000 |
| 1931 | 15,378,000 |
| 1932 | 18,880,000 |

Mr. Hopkins reported that New York State since November 1, 1931, has appropriated $55,000,000 for relief. He added that at the time of his testimony—January, 1933—$37,000,000 had been spent of State money and the balance is being appropriated at $4,000,000 a month; also that the total monthly expenditures for direct relief in the State now amount to $8,000,000 a month and should be $10,000,000 a month in 1933.

Mr. Lurie testified that in 43 cities of the United States $17,500,000 a month are being spent.

Miss Ward, general secretary of the Family Welfare Association of Baltimore, added that in Baltimore $1 per week is being given per family in need.

Mr. West pointed out that in the month of November the old-age pension average was $25.97 in most cases for a single person; that $20.57 is the unemployment relief average for a whole family, taking all sizes; that in many cases the limit of relief being granted is $3 to $5 a week, or less; and that in one Southwestern State the regular scale of relief is $5 per month or $60 per year.

Doctor Winslow of the Federal Children's Bureau, testified that in cities of 50,000 or more in January, 1931, about $14,000,000 was spent for relief and the highest amount expended was $29,000,000 at the peak point in March, 1932. During October, 1932, it was about $24,000,000. The drop in July was caused to a considerable extent by the discontinuance of relief work in Philadelphia, to which I shall refer in a moment.

Questioned about Mr. Croxton's statement, indicating that under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation " no persons have gone hungry if they have made applications in the 36 States covered by the corporation's loans," Mr. West declared his disagreement, and pointed out that Mr. Croxton's own figures showed a very large number reported in need and not receiving relief. He added that Mr. Hodson had expressed the opinion that approximately 30,000 families in need of relief are not being cared for in New York territory nor being assisted by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Mr. West further said that reports had reached the American Association of Social Workers, with which he is connected, that in many cities families in need are not being provided aid. He gave the following table listing some examples of that sort:

| | Families or individuals |
|---|---|
| San Francisco, Calif | 16,000 |
| Denver, Colo | 3,000 |
| Washington, D. C | 2,000 |
| Lawrence, Mass | 800–1,200 |
| Dallas County, Tex | 20,000 |
| Houston, Tex | 3,000 |
| Kanawha County, W. Va | 2,000 |
| Ohio County, W. Va | 1,500 |
| Orleans Parish, La | 4,000 |
| Waterbury, Conn | 337 |

I turn, because of the brevity of time, from a further summary of the testimony I had hoped to present to the subject of the effects of unemployment and inadequate relief.

Mr. Van A. Bittner, representing the United Mine Workers of America, after testifying about conditions in West Virginia, said, " Senator, God only knows how these people get along."

Taking Harrison County as a fair example of coal mining regions, he stated that 25,459 people out of 78,567 in the county are receiving some relief. Of 6,500 coal miners in that county less than 1,600 are employed leaving more than 4,900 unemployed. About 3,500 men are employed each week at $2.40 per 8-hour day, 20 per cent of this being paid in cash, the men working approximately five days a month.

He further stated:

> I have known hundreds of families in the last three months and prior to that time but, since the Government flour has been distributed, that have not a thing to eat three times a day—or whenever they do eat—but just this flour and water baked up as best they can.

Mr. West testified that we used to boast of our standards of living; that we have made people afraid of relief; that we have been guided by fear that people would lean too heavily on relief agencies, and, as a result—

> We have blindly put millions of people through terrible experiences * * * because we have not been willing to grant relief adequately.

He discussed the way in which we have let families lose all their resources, followed that with references to low amounts of food relief, and discussed the loss in capacity which will follow the crushing out of every hope, faith, and opportunity.

Doctor De Schweinitz stated that in England and Germany a man out of work knows he will at least receive shelter, food, and clothing though he is not helped so as to make him want to live without work. He added:

> There is a kind of security existing abroad, which is absent in the United States * * * If a man has a job, the United States is the best place in the world to live, but if you have not a job you are better off almost anywhere else. In the United States we need to provide a minimum of adequacy, that is at least shelter, food, and clothing * * *.
> One of the great values that I see in Federal aid is to make it possible for many families, or those individuals requiring help, to receive it wherever he happens to be at the time.

Mr. Lurie, speaking of the effects of unemployment, said:

> Homes are lost, insurance policies canceled, aid from relatives and friends has been terminated, families are forced to exhaust and destroy indefinitely their credit before relief is granted to them. This statement on the degree of destitution reached before relief is granted is applicable in practically all communities. A number of cities report that no work or home relief is being made available to adult families—that is, to childless couples or families without young children. No relief or very inadequate forms of relief are being given to the unattached men and women without family connections.

He added many other distressing details.

Attention has already been directed to the testimony of Mr. Estill, director of public welfare in West Virginia, showing 3,600 applications for relief in one county, the merits of which welfare workers were too busy to investigate. As was also stated by him, in using Federal funds medical care had to be abandoned because of a regulation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which in the grants made for the year 1932 adopted a resolution to the effect that the funds were not to be available for medical, hospital, or institutional services.

Mrs. Tyson, giving a picture of the idle unemployed in Pennsylvania, said in part:

> Large groups of the unemployed stand around listlessly. There is great need for clothing, particularly men's and boys'. * * * The Catholic priest said that the men had been half starved for so long that they have no spirit left.

Asked how the men passed their time, the answer was that they spent it wondering if the steel mill will reopen. Mrs. Tyson added: "There is no prospect of the mill being opened."

Though most of the testimony was tragic, perhaps its most stirring feature related to the effects of unemployment on children. Information on this subject crept into the record from time to time.

Doctor Billikopf referred to a book by Ernest Poole, quoting Mary Breckenridge, organizer and director of the Frontier Nursing Service, as speaking of numberless deaths from tuberculosis in the mountains of Kentucky, and saying:

> Hundreds of children are stricken and so little can be done for them in their crowded, drafty homes. So they grow worse and soon infect others in the family. I remember a little boy of 10 who had tuberculosis, and whose two brothers had died of it. He came to Wendover one day, and at the end of his visit he said:
> "Well, now I'm going home to die. Everybody in our house dies."

Doctor McCormack, secretary of the Kentucky State Board of Health, is also quoted as having said recently, as reported by the New York Times:

> At the State health officers' conference at Lexington a few days ago the distressing intelligence was developed that in 40 per cent of the deaths in 18 rural counties the patients had not been visited by a physician, due to the fact that the people are without money.

On the subject of eye trouble Doctor Billikopf testified as follows:

> Doctor McCormack cited three cases of xerophthalmia, a very rare ailment, caused by lack of vitamin A in the food consumed, and which is characterized by a drying up of the eyeballs. This disease afflicted Poland during the World War.
> I might say that in 1920, when I visited Poland and other contiguous countries, I came across this disease known as xerophthalmia, and in Germany, as Hungerkrankheit, a disease which results in continuous blinking, due to lack of food, and subsequent blindness. I saw hundreds of such victims, and I say to you that of all the devastating impressions made on me on my visit shortly following the war, nothing compared with the sight of children afflicted with this dreadful disease. I thought we were immune in this country, but here comes Doctor McCormack citing specific instances of xerophthalmia, found in Kentucky and possibly elsewhere.

Doctor Goldstein testified in part that the department of health of the city of New York makes periodic examinations of children in the public schools of that city, and that the commissioner of health reported recently that 33⅓ per cent more children were suffering from undernourishment than 12 months ago. He added that there is a breakdown in family life, that families are forced to move into tenements declared insanitary and uninhabitable 25 years ago; that families are herded into such small space that they suffer dangers to health and moral life; also that there is a marked increase in insanity and suicides because men and women are unable to stand the strain of unemployment and constant suffering.

Mr. Carstens, director of the Child Welfare League of America, having about 150 member organizations, declared in part that in January, 1932, there had been an increase over 1931 of about 39 per cent in the number of children taken from their homes and placed in foster homes, agencies, or institutions, public and private; that since January, 1932, the increase has been only about 5 per cent, which some people would conclude means returning good times. He adds that instead, the explanation of the diminished percentage is due to the exhaustion of resources of the receiving agencies.

Nine agencies had stopped receiving children, 57 of 62 agencies reported they had actually turned down about 1,700 children, and the number was doubtless larger. He added, with reference to 75,000 children, that 71 of 145 different organizations had had to curtail their services to children, not giving good medical or dental services or the children's allowances of 5 or 10 cents a week. He stated that dependent, neglected, and early delinquent children, if not properly cared for, may later become delinquents or criminals; also that 1,978 children were reported held in care ready to go out into the world but with no work to go to. Discussing the care of 350,000 children, he said:

> Thousands of children are being refused care—I refer now specifically to the 1,700 that were reported, but the total number must be considered considerably larger—because neither the private nor public agencies are in a position to give them care.

Speaking of transient children, he added that the number is variously estimated from 200,000 up to a million—no one, he believed, knowing the number—and added that he thought care for the transient groups is an obligation for the Federal Government—

> Because I do not think it is going to be naturally assumed by the local community. Our committee is helping. However, that is a drop in the bucket, of course. * * * It is not merely a matter of caring for them overnight; they must have something in the way of education and recreation that will hold them in the community and keep them from further drifting.

Miss Edith Abbott, dean of the School of Social Service Administration, University of Chicago, testified in part that in Franklin County, Ill., she has been told there are hundreds of children who have not had a balanced meal for years; that when the funds for mothers' pensions were cut off in 1930, mothers and children were left without this sole means of support, and the relief given has been inadequate. She gave many other instances of the unfortunate effects of limited relief on child health and welfare. She quoted letters stating that many children are suffering from lack of proper nourishment in Chicago; and that 240 children in one school examined by a doctor were declared clearly cases of malnutrition anæmia.

She added that under the pending bill, in her judgment, sound social standards would be better preserved than under the provisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Mr. Pickett, secretary of the American Friends Service Committee, who has done devoted and effective work for the American Friends testified about relief given in Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Illinois. He stated that his organization was feeding in January in 16 counties in West Virginia and Kentucky about 11,000 or 12,000 children and that the figures have been climbing rapidly; that the proportion of children fed this year in the schools is 51 per cent, compared with 35 per cent last year; that shoes are more scarce this year than last and that funds have been set aside to purchase shoes for the children only. He said:

> In Kentucky, just before I came away, I received notice that three schools have had to close because of the presence of trachoma. * * * I understand it is augmented by malnutrition. It is not necessarily a malnutrition disease. There is another disease which has been turned up by the State department of health which causes a disturbance in the eyes, which makes the child completely blind. * * * Within three weeks, in Kentucky, by putting some of the children on a butter diet, sight has been restored.

He added that the grants in Kentucky from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were entirely inadequate, the first grants ranging as low as $1 a family per month. He testified that the newer grants had been not nearly adequate, being approximately $1 per week per family. He further stated that conditions are worse this year than last so far as children are concerned.

Miss Ward reported that in Johns Hopkins Hospital a study of the admissions in 1928–29 compared with 1931–32 showed that the causes for admission had changed and that mental depression is an increasing factor. Doctor Reeny was quoted as saying that even in child complaints this year anxiety states and depression have been conspicuous and that in almost every instance the illness can be traced to insecurity resulting from unemployment and overcrowded living conditions. Among the symptoms of anxiety conditions are repeated headaches, rapid heartbeats, and suffocation.

Mrs. Tyson, of the Pennsylvania State Welfare Department, quoted Doctor Appel, secretary of health for that State, as saying that in the last three years the reports of health examinations in Pennsylvania show a progressive increase of some 10 or 28 per cent in 1930 in the proportion of children who are underweight and give evidences of malnutrition. Mrs. Tyson, speaking of the limited diets in Fayette County, Pa., referred to by Mr. Kennedy, said that people living on such diets for a long period of time are living "in a condition of semistarvation," and that when men are offered work the testimony is that they are frequently too weak to do it.

Mrs. Tyson further declares that in May, 1932, the Friends Service were feeding hungry children in five or six bituminous counties and that for lack of funds the service was withdrawn last summer and has not been resumed this fall; that Pennsylvania has hardly touched the problem of transient families and homeless men and boys; that in one little town of 2,000 in southwestern Pennsylvania attempts were made to feed 1,500 transients last year; and that many young boys, hungry and tired and broken in spirit, are simply moving on "looking for a frontier." She further said that in Clearfield County, with a population of 86,000, the State physician reports 6,000 malnourished children who needed dental care, glasses, tonsil operations, and, in one county, operations for crippled children can not be secured; also that the hospitals are burdened almost to the breaking point.

Mr. President, I wish now to advert for a moment to what may be called the failure of the compromise legislation of July, 1932, which gave the Reconstruction Finance Corporation supervision of unemployment relief.

Mr. Hurlin, director of the statistical department of the Russell Sage Foundation of New York City, stated that in some cities of the country there is an almost ridiculously low rate of relief—such as 27 cents, 30 cents, 39 cents, 43 cents, 63 cents, compared with $8.93 per capita in Boston. He added that the table placed in the record by him gives evidence that the policy so far followed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not been directed toward meeting existing needs but merely toward satisfying requirements of the existing law in giving relief, provided certain financial conditions have been met. He further said that it is of the utmost necessity that the law be changed as soon as possible so that a new policy may be adopted which will place at the disposal of the States liberal relief funds.

Dr. S. E. Leland, professor of public finance of the University of Chicago, declared that Federal aid should be outright; that it should not be granted in the form of loans to be collected in more taxes from people who have little or no ability to pay, but the tax should be placed on the entire Nation rather than on State and local units.

Mr. Hodson said that the experience of New York State showed that a Federal grant for relief based on the principle of grants in aid, which means supplementing local resources, and given good administration, will not dry up local resources, but, on the contrary, will stimulate them.

Mr. Betters, executive director of the American Municipal Association, of Chicago, urged that section E of the relief act of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be repealed immediately. That section provides that municipalities, in order to borrow, must put up collateral and is used where a governor, as at one time in the case of Michigan, refused to assume responsibility, as a result of which Detroit had to borrow. Mr. Betters pointed out that section E gives the governor the opportunity to shift responsibility back to the local government, which he does not think Congress intended because of the varying attitude of different governors. As a result cities in one State must issue bonds while others across a State line 50 miles away do not have to issue bonds.

Mr. Betters also objected to the loan basis in the Federal law, pointing out that a State must almost take a pauper's oath before it can get funds and that Governor Lehman had said that the New York Legislature was not going to take the pauper's oath to borrow. That feature has been eliminated in the substitute. He added that if we are going to permit municipalities to issue bonds we are going to have a most serious credit situation facing American cities; that there are already many defaults and that there will be many more; that if Chicago had not authorized a refunding plan for the city's $24,000,000 bonds there would have been complete financial chaos in Chicago.

Mr. Betters said that the present relief bill in his judgment is "the most sane bill" that can be drawn, especially in regard to distribution. He approved the 40 per cent allotment, and added that there is practically no State which does not need such Federal funds and that the allotment would be equitable.

He also pointed out that, because of the rivalry between cities and rural communities over road-building programs, many governors were reluctant to apply for emergency relief; and that it is bad to tie up the loans with road programs for that reason. He added that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had taken an unsound position in trying to force States to accept additional taxes, for in Illinois this meant forcing the sales tax on the State, when a balanced tax system ought to be possible.

Speaking of the need to repeal section E immediately, he said that defaults in municipal credit would affect the entire credit situation of the country, adding:

> I can not see that a default in a city of the size of Detroit is going to have no effect other than within the boundaries of the city of Detroit. It will affect the whole financial credit of the United States.

Mr. Clapp, director of the welfare federation of Cleveland, said that there are definite limits to the plan of loaning one-fifth of possible Federal highway funds years in advance.

Attention has already been directed to Mr. Pickett's testimony about the low standards of relief of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which were at first about $1 per family per month but which this year have been raised to $1 per week per family.

Mr. Croxton, representing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, endeavored to avoid that criticism by saying that relief can never be adequate, but conceded that relief is frequently inadequate.

Attention has also been directed to the testimony of Mr. West, page 364, that families in need are often not provided help. This is clearly due in part to the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is an agency waiting for applications for loans. No testimony was given indicating that it reaches out to know the need and tries to make loans which will adequately meet that need.

A striking illustration of this unsatisfactory feature of the operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law was the case of Philadelphia, where relief was abandoned because of lack of funds during July and August, 1932.

It appears necessary to digress long enough to mention this experience in some detail. The cause was the exhaustion of relief funds which were sustaining 52,000 families when relief was withdrawn.

Shortly before this occurred a public statement was issued by leading citizens of Philadelphia that the city was about to pass from civilization to barbarism.

Those who think that the relief problem can be avoided should read the report of a committee of the community council which investigated what actually happened in Philadelphia in the two months while relief was suspended. This report is contained in our testimony. It was prepared by an economist of Philadelphia, Mr. Clague, and describes conditions in the two months when no relief was available for the destitute people of Philadelphia.

From that report I read the following:

People do not starve to death when relief stops; they just starve, with the margin by which life persists maintained by the pity of their neighbors and by a sort of scavenging on the community.

An examination was made by the Philadelphia committee of some 400 families out of more than 50,000 families that were destitute. The committee reported:

Most of them were absolutely dependent for existence on the food orders supplied through State funds administered by the committee for unemployment relief. Then there were no more funds, and relief—except for a little milk for half-sick children, and a little Red Cross flour—was suddenly discontinued. And Philadelphia asked itself what was happening to these 52,000 families. There were no reports of people starving in the streets, and yet from what possible source were 52,000 families getting enough food to live on?

These are some of the facts that were discovered:

The families rustled for themselves as much as they could. A common source of supply for one group was the docks where fruit and vegetables for market are sorted. Children and adults hung around the stalls and snatched at anything that was cast out. Occasionally they were able to make off with good produce, but the police were watchful and such enterprise was often disastrous. Street begging was only occasionally resorted to, said the investigators, likewise the petty thieving of milk and groceries from doorsteps. There is little doubt, however, that gifts of food from grocers, reported by a considerable number of families, were usually obtained by a form of begging. Children, it seems, had the habit of going to a store and by pleading hunger, inducing the grocer to give them a little food. Children ran errands for grocers, watched pushcarts, did anything in exchange for fruit or vegetables. The myriad ways in which a family, its entire attention concentrated on food, just food, succeeded in obtaining it constitutes abundant evidence of the ingenuity and perseverance of these people.

As a result of all these efforts, what did these families have? What meals did they get and of what did these meals consist? About 8 per cent of the total number were subsisting on one meal a day. Many more were getting only two meals a day, and still others were irregular, sometimes one meal, sometimes two, occasionally, by great good fortune, three.

* * * * * * *

The Bakers, the Beccarias, the MacIntyres, and the other 397 families visited did not starve to death when relief stopped. They kept alive from day to day, catch-as-catch-can, reduced for actual subsistence to something of the status of a stray cat prowling for food, for which a kindly soul occasionally sets out a plate of table scraps or a saucer of milk. What this does to the innate dignity of the human soul is not for this writer to discuss. What it does to the bodies of the social attitudes of adults and children is something that we shall know more and more about for years to come. And these 400 families were, remember, a fair sampling of 52,000 from whom relief was withdrawn. What happened to the 400 happened in greater or less degree to the 52,000, and will happen again if the exigencies of the winter should force another discontinuance of food orders.

The testimony in the record about medical and other aid having been abandoned in various parts of the country supports the same criticism of the relief features of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Another criticism which frequently appeared in the testimony in regard to the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law was due to the fact that its loans were made for short-time periods which prevented long-time relief planning. Those who discussed this pointed out that the fear that other money would not be forthcoming for relief had a tremendous effect on families, and whenever fear was expressed in the press demonstrations began at the relief stations arising from other than communistic sources. A witness cited one case of a great mass demonstration at the Loop in Chicago and said that such demonstrations are inspired by facts.

What, then, did the experts offer as desirable further legislation? Witnesses practically without exception favored the proposals of the pending bill, to provide $500,000,000 at least, administered independently of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Doctor Billikopf pointed out that relief needs, according to those of past experience, will increase for at least a year after the turn for the better in economic conditions. Mr. West noted that Senator Pomerene, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, had suggested in October, 1932, that the $300,000,000 appropriated in July of that year was expected to last for two years, and will have been practically exhausted in one.

The American Association of Social Workers, on February 4, 1933, confirming what has been said, reported through a subcommittee in favor of standards and safeguards for the use of Federal funds contemplated in the bill of Senator LA FOLLETTE and myself, and pointed out that the relief act of 1932 has definite defects. I ask that this report be incorporated in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF SOCIAL WORKERS,
New York City, February 4, 1933.

REPORT OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON METHODS OF ADMINISTRATION

The subcommittee has reviewed the reports of the conference on Federal action made in 1931 in so far as they related to the subject assigned to this committee. It has also reviewed the several measures which have been introduced in Congress in the winter of 1932–33.

The committee has undertaken to redraft a statement of the important safeguards which should be applied to a Federal measure as follows:

RECOMMENDED POLICIES AND PRACTICES

1. Federal aid to States for unemployment relief should be granted when evidence accumulates that any considerable number of States are unable to provide through local and State funds for the minimum adequate relief needs of persons in distress due to unemployment. Such aid should be in the form of grants by which the wider taxing powers and the greater credit resources of the Federal Government may be brought into use in such manner as to stimulate State and local responsibility.

2. Federal administration: Allocation and Federal administration of funds to States should be vested in a small appointive board of persons specially qualified for the task. This board should be empowered to employ social workers and such trained specialists as are necessary. A merit system for selection of this staff is essential. The bill should allow an adequate sum for the administrative expenses of the board and its staff.

3. Allocation of funds: The policy of matching Federal funds with State funds should be followed, but provision should also be made for a discretionary fund.

4. It should be the policy and practice of the Federal Board to assist the States in every possible way in the development of necessary local and State machinery for relief and service to those in need. The essential components of such State administration consist of:

(a) Local units able to give quick and effective relief and services, organized on county or city lines.

(b) An effective State administrative unit for the direction and supervision of the expenditures of State and Federal funds for relief purposes. This unit should have authority to allocate funds within the State, and set standards of local relief administration and of personnel. Where the existing State welfare department is or can be made adequate for these purposes, it should be designated as the State administrative unit unless other adequate relief administration has already been established.

The Federal board, through powers granted to it, can be of effective help in the encouragement and development of adequate State administrative units. To that purpose it should have power to give the State financial assistance to be applied not only to relief but also to service costs.

The Federal board should have sufficient authority over the standards of administration in the States so that it may withhold appropriations which in its opinion would not be properly spent for the needs of the unemployed. It is understood, however, that the influence of a skillful Federal administration would be exercised in the development of economical and humane standards of local and State administration through educational processes rather than through the withholding of appropriations. Allocations should be made for a period of not less than six months in advance, to permit the State administration to develop stable programs, employ proper personnel with some guaranty of security of tenure, and avoid uncertainty and insecurity to those in need of relief.

5. As a corollary to the above, the Federal Government should have its dealings with State governments and not assume the responsibility for allocation of Federal funds within the States. The Federal board should, however, have the power to call for such detailed information as it deems necessary concerning needs and resources of the political subdivisions within the States.

The administration of Federal aid should include provisions for the transient and homeless; that is, individuals or families without legal settlement. Legal restrictions and local practices of long standing now exaggerated by lack of local resources for adequate care of residents creates a particularly acute problem. Special provisions are necessary through Federal funds granted to States for cooperation between localities within States and across State lines in returning transients to their legal residences when such action is socially desirable, and also for providing shelters and other methods of treatment.

EMERGENCY RELIEF AND CONSTRUCTION ACT OF 1932

In comparing the provisions for Federal relief under the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 with the points deemed essential as in the above statement the committee reports the following conclusions:

1. The act does not conform to the provision that Federal aid should be in the form of grants.

2. The act provides no special board to administer Federal funds. The allocation of funds has been a minor responsibility of the board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

3. The act does not establish a matching policy.

4. The act does not give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation specific authority to assist in the development of State administrative programs. The Federal administration under the act has, however, been of such assistance to States in several instances. However, the practice of making advances on short notice and for a period of not more than one or two months has been a severe handicap to sound State planning.

5. The act does not confine the Federal administration's relations to the States. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has under section E dealt directly with subdivisions of States and under section C has also assumed responsibility jointly with States for allocation of funds to particular subdivisions.

6. Since the act does not provide grants, provisions for homeless and transients have eventually to be financed from local and State treasuries and must necessarily receive only secondary consideration in communities hard pressed for adequate provision for their own residents.

THE COSTIGAN-LA FOLLETTE BILL, S. 5125

Comparison has also been made between the policies and practices as stated by this committee and S. 5125, as amended, and reported by the Committee on Manufactures, as follows:

1. The bill does provide that Federal aid shall be given in the form of grants.

2. The bill does vest allocation and Federal administration in a small board especially appointed.

3. The bill does provide for matching Federal funds with State funds, through section 4–A, and also provides a reserve fund which can be allocated by the Federal board on the basis of need.

4. The bill does not specifically provide for the type of State and local administration nor insure the standards of administration which the committee believes are necessary, but sufficient power is given the Federal board to permit, if not to insure, an effective administration.

5. The bill does provide that the Federal board should have its dealings with State governments and not with political subdivisions thereof.

6. The bill does provide for the use of Federal funds for the transient and homeless.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the Senator's remarks. I did desire, if he had time, to ask him about two questions for my own benefit as to the difference between the two bills so as to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I, with due respect, ask the Senator to defer his questions until I conclude? I hope then to have time to answer.

One point made by the report of this subcommittee with respect to the substitute of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], by implication at least, is that it does not, except for transients, give relief in the form of grants.

Next, the substitute does not provide a special board to supervise the distribution of the Federal funds, although the Senator from New York in December of last year stated to the Senate that he then favored such independent supervision by experts.

Another suggestion stressed in the report is that a State matching policy is desirable. This is not provided in the substitute of the Senator from New York.

It is further urged that the law enacted last July has not led the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid the development of State administrative relief programs; also, that the practice of making short-time advances on loans for periods of one or two months has imposed hardships on State and city planning. So far as I am aware, that defect is not corrected in the substitute of the Senator from New York.

It is also urged that a proper bill—the substitute does not have this limitation—should confine the Federal Government's relief relations to States and not extend them to cities. The effect on municipal credit of the present practice has already been indicated.

The report of experts, therefore, indorses the pending bill, not the substitute offered by the Senator from New York.

But time restrictions compel me to conclude, and, unusual though that course may be, I do so not with the customary appeal for the enactment of the pending measure, the desirability and importance of which are apparent to all. Every heart, except it be of bloodless stone, must be moved by the desperate lot of millions out of work whose proudest boast heretofore has been their American citizenship. Nothing, I venture to say, can justify the continuance of an attitude which does not recognize the necessity for immediate, noble, national relief of human distress due to our economic catastrophe. For good or ill, therefore, it is as certain as anything human can be that the vote of the Senate this afternoon, except for the record, is already a finality.

For sound reasons I conclude by paying tribute to the fine men and women, both in and out of this Chamber, who have been supporting constructive and adequate legislation for Federal relief aid. Especially is praise due to public opinion, which for the most part has been in advance of its leadership. Especially is good government indebted to the independent press, including the publications of organized labor, which has consistently recognized the gravity of human need and has supported the demand for adequate statutory relief. Fortunately, there are to-day, as there were in the heroic past, representatives of living journalism in places of power who believe that the supreme task of the writer is to influence human life continuously in the direction of justice and human welfare.

Mr. President, following my remarks I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a brief editorial on the pending bill from the New Republic, as well as a series of editorials from the Washington Daily News, which have received wide circulation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New Republic for February 8, 1933]

The problem of finding enough money for relief of the unemployed is steadily growing more serious. Both private charity and municipal funds are about at the end of their rope, and many of the individual States have also exhausted their resources. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is reported to have loaned to 37 States $145,000,000 of its $300,000,000 fund, but additional needs already in sight will more than eat up the balance. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, operating on its general policy of giving as little as possible (except to banks) wraps itself in a maze of red tape which the States find it almost impossible to break through. Moreover, the fact that it merely lends the money makes some States hesitate to apply for relief, a fact which in turn contributes to the misery into which at least a fifth of our population is now plunged. Harry L. Hopkins, New York State chairman of the emergency relief organization, estimates that 500,000 families which are in need of relief are not getting it. Even those who are being aided receive pitifully inadequate amounts. The maximum anywhere in the United States is now about $1 per person per week. In some States it is only 50 cents. Trying to keep body and soul together on 7 cents a day is only slow starvation.

In view of the inevitable necessities of the next few months, a bill has been introduced in the Senate for further Federal relief. A combination of the Costigan-La Follette and Cutting bills, it appropriates $500,000,000 to be expended in the next two years. The money would not be granted in the form of loans but as an outright contribution by the American Government to keep American citizens from starvation. Forty per cent of this money would be distributed among the States on a basis of population and the other 60 per cent held in reserve to be sent where the need was greatest. The money would be raised through the sale of Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures and would, therefore, not constitute an immediate drain upon the Treasury. A special appropriation of $15,000,000 would be spent in the attempt to rescue America's "wild boys," the hundreds of thousands of lads, mostly between the ages of 15 and 20, whom the depression has turned loose upon the highways. This bill deserves to pass; if it fails to do so in the present Congress, it will be brought up again in the April session which now seems inevitable. Mr. Roosevelt is understood to favor it, and his influence in that session will be great.

HUMANITY'S CALL

The chief opposition to the Costigan-La Follette $500,000,000 direct relief act seems to be not that it is superfluous, but that it is without precedent. Here, some are saying, is something new and untried in America, a Federal dole.

Records of the United States Treasury will reassure them. These records reveal that since 1803 the United States Government has responded to the call of distress 114 times.

Seldom before, the records will show, has America failed to come to the aid of sufferers either in far-off lands or at home. Whether the sufferers were victims of flood, fire, or famine or hurricane, drought, or earthquake Uncle Sam has not failed to reach into his pocket, nor has he passed by on the other side.

Since 1812 Congress has voted money to relieve the victims of foreign disasters nine times. In 1919 it granted $100,000,000 for the American Relief Administration. The American Relief Administration, under Herbert Hoover, distributed a billion dollars in all, feeding upwards of 200,000,000 persons in 20 countries of Europe. At one time it was giving warm meals to 4,000,000 children. Other Federal beneficences abroad included aid to victims of Russian famine; Japanese, Venezuelan, Costa Rican, and Italian earthquakes; Chinese famine; and French West Indian tornadoes.

Our charities begin at home. Since 1803 Congress has made appropriations for domestic relief no less than 61 times. Some of these appropriations appear as loans, most of them as grants. Not counting the $300,000,000 hunger loan fund made available for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation last year, total Federal disbursements for domestic disaster relief to date amount to $650,533,362. From 1827, when Congress voted $20,000 for the relief of fire victims in Alexandria, Va., until last July, when it gave out $40,000,000 worth of Farm Board wheat and cotton for Red Cross distribution to depression victims, the United States of America has kept up its record as a generous giver.

Never, until now, has Uncle Sam turned deaf ear to humanity's cry. And this time he is deaf to the call from his own people.

The time for Federal giving is here again. It was here a year ago when spokesmen from scores of cities told Congress they were at the end of their resources. Testimony of social workers at the current hearings on the Costigan-La Follette bill shows how much more critical is the need to-day. They estimate from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 Americans in distress now.

"Unless Federal aid be changed from a loan basis to direct aid, American cities are going to have defaults which will shake not only municipal credit, but the whole credit structure of the United States," said Paul V. Betters, executive director of the American Municipal Association. "Cities are crippling essential services to meet relief needs. They are facing default. The present system only stimulates financial chaos."

THE WAR ON HUNGER

A hunger relief bill has been voted out of committee and is before the United States Senate for action in the short session. Combining the Costigan-La Follette and Cutting bills, it is a life-line for 3,500,000 destitute families and 1,000,000 homeless youths.

The revised bill separates hunger relief from business and public works loans. A separate board of three, including an expert social worker, would administer outright grants to the States. Of the $500,000,000 set aside for the next two years $15,000,000 is earmarked for transient care. These sums are desperately needed.

The country is spending $1,000,000,000 a year now on relief. More than a third of the unemployed are on charity. But every report proves that the States and communities are about at the end of their resources. Private charities and local public funds are depleted. We have now reached the third phase of the relief campaign, Federal aid.

At the Senate committee hearings two score of relief workers from many States testified. They had come in from the firing line. Practically all of them said that the fight against hunger is going against them. Practically all urged quick and ample Federal grants.

If anyone doubts that this rich country's enemy to-day is hunger, let him listen to these hunger fighters:

Harry L. Hopkins, New York State chairman of emergency relief: "At a conservative estimate there are 500,000 families in the United States not getting relief who should be receiving it."

Van Bittner, United Mine Workers, Fairmont, W. Va.: "Our people are hungry. Our children are crying for bread. They do not have sufficient clothing to protect them from the blasts of winter."

Dr. Sidney E. Goldstein, Chairman Joint Committee on Unemployment: "Semistarvation is sweeping across the country with the ravages of a plague in its wake."

Dr. Jacob Billikopf, Philadelphia Federation of Jewish Charities: "Many States have no resources to fall back on. The majority of cities are smashed and crippled financially. You can't expect unemployment relief from them."

H. L. Lurie, Bureau of Social Research, N. Y.: "Few of the large relief agencies are giving as much as $1 a week per person for food and in some of the organized cities the amount has fallen to as low as 50 cents per person per week."

Miss Helen Hall, University Settlement, Philadelphia: "Philadelphia has gone through four periods when there was no money for unemployment relief. Of the 52,000 destitute families left without relief 37 per cent were not getting the normal three meals a day."

Clarence E. Pickett, American Friends Service Committee, on conditions in Kentucky and West Virginia mine regions: "Warm clothing is almost nonexistent. In Kentucky I received notice that three schools had to close because of trachoma. One looks with a certain amount of trepidation to what might happen if millions of our people might come to feel that the State is their enemy."

Karl De Schweinitz, Philadelphia Community Council, on overcrowding due to evictions: "Out of every 1,000 families applying for help 220 families are living with somebody else. One child said: 'In the last year we have lived with six different families. At first they were glad to have us, but after a while they get very tired of you.'"

Samuel A. Goldsmith, Chicago Jewish Charities: "With Chicago standards you would need a Federal fund of well over a billion dollars. It is a terrific figure, but we are in a war."

We are in a war. In the last war we spent $35,000,000,000 in two years to beat the enemy overseas. Shall we refuse to spend one-seventh of that to beat the enemy at home?

STARVING CHILDREN

The attention of complacent Congressmen, governors, and legislators is respectfully called to a warning from Health Commissioner Wynne of New York City that the death rate from undernourishment is increasing among children.

Doctor Wynne told the welfare council's health section that 25 per cent of his city's school children to-day show signs of undernourishment compared with 15 per cent a year ago, a fact that probably will be reflected in an increase in the death rate this year. New York's school teachers have spent $2,000,000 helping feed their pupils. New York State has bonded itself for $30,000,000 for relief, and New York City leads all communities in the extent of its giving. Yet in these children's homes it is found that the gas has been turned off and many children are eating raw food. Clothing is scanty. Many go to bed with no covering.

"This can not go on much longer," Doctor Wynne declared.

Here is an official report from the richest city of the richest State of the richest nation of the world. It shows that helpless children slowly are being permitted to sicken and die from lack of food and warmth.

What is happening in poorer States and communities may well be imagined.

Starvation is a bitter word. Yet there is no other word for the weakening brought on by insufficient and improper food. Starvation of children during a famine may be inevitable. Starvation of children in this well-stocked land is criminal.

Testifying before a Senate committee this week Prof. Haven Emerson said distributed relief is too low to permit "growth of children, to maintain a reasonable degree of resistance to infections of various kinds, or to prevent deterioration of the human stock, if long continued."

Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the United States Children's Bureau, testified that "no one familiar with relief believes the needs have been met anywhere."

Congress should pass the Costigan-La Follette and Wagner relief bills for the winter's fight on hunger.

WHEN RELIEF STOPS

Half relief for needy families has become a commonplace in this land of plenty. Some American cities and States facing empty treasuries may be interested to know what happens when relief is shut off entirely. This has occurred no less than four times in Philadelphia.

What did its 52,000 destitute families do when the City of Brotherly Love failed them? The Community Council set out to answer this question. It studied the condition of 400 typical forgotten families. It reported:

"People do not starve to death when relief stops; they just starve by the margin with which life persists, maintained by the pity of their neighbors and by a sort of scavenging on the community.

"The families rustled for themselves as much as they could. A common source of supply for one group was the docks where fruit and vegetables for market are sorted. Children and adults hung around the stalls and snatched at anything that was cast out. * * * Street begging was only occasionally resorted to, likewise the petty thieving of milk and groceries from doorsteps. * * * Children, it seems, had the habit of going to a store and by pleading hunger inducing the grocer to give them a little food. Children ran errands, watched pushcarts, did anything in exchange for fruit or vegetables. The myriad ways in which a family, its entire attention concentrated on food—just food—succeeded in obtaining it constitutes abundant evidence of the ingenuity and perseverance of these people.

"What meals did they get and of what did these meals consist? About 8 per cent were subsisting on one meal a day. * * * Thirty-seven per cent of all families were not getting the normal three meals a day. * * * They kept alive from day to day, catch-as-catch-can, reduced for actual subsistence to something of the status of a stray cat prowling for food."

Chairman Miller, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, admits that the Government's hunger relief loan fund will be exhausted by June. If Congress adjourns without replenishing that fund through passage of the Costigan-La Follette and Wagner bills, it will help turn more American families into such as these.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If there is time, it will be a pleasure to answer the questions of the Senator from Alabama.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have already addressed the Senate at length upon this question. I shall, therefore, consume only a moment to explain what I regard as the difference between the substitute bill and the bill proposed by the Senators from Wisconsin and Colorado.

At the outset I want to say that if there is any implication in the remarks of either the Senator from Wisconsin or the Senator from Colorado reflecting upon my desire to help in providing relief for the destitute I think that my record and my efforts in that regard since I became a Member of this body are a complete answer to any such suggestion or to any reflection upon the sincerity of my activities.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I wish merely to state at this time that there was no concealed implication in my remarks with respect to the public devotion and regard for the public welfare, especially in the industrial field, of the able Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

Further than that observation, I shall disregard the criticism made by the Senator from Wisconsin as to the effect of the substitute which I have offered on the question of bringing relief to the destitute. I recognize that in his sincerity and earnestness in behalf of his own legislation he, perhaps, was tempted to overstate his own case. That is a perfectly natural limitation that we all have; and it must, therefore, in my judgment, be overlooked.

Nevertheless, there is no difference between the legislation proposed by me to relieve destitution and that proposed by the Senators from Wisconsin and Colorado except this fundamental distinction:

The payments made to the States under the bill which I proposed are in the nature of loans. The payments made to the States under the Costigan-La Follette bills are outright grants. That is the fundamental distinction and the only distinction.

As to the amount of money which is appropriated or authorized in both cases, there is practically no distinction. I provide $300,000,000, and that, together with the amount which is still available with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the relief of destitution, amounts altogether to $450,000,000. Under the Costigan-La Follette bill the amount authorized is $500,000,000, so that at most there is a difference of $50,000,000.

There is a restriction, however, upon the distribution under the Costigan-La Follette bill which does not exist in the legislation which I have proposed. And may I say, by way of interpolation, that I have never been much interested in the method of distribution of the funds. What I have been concerned with and interested in was that funds should be available to the States and to the municipalities to feed the needy and the destitute.

Two hundred million of the five hundred million dollars authorized under the Costigan-La Follette bill is to be distributed among the States according to population, with one restriction; and I think under the present economic and fiscal situation of the States and municipalities it is a serious restriction, because it provides that for every $66 granted under the provisions of the La Follette-Costigan bill a State must match with $100. So that if a State is in financial straits where its burden has become so heavy that it can not raise a sufficient sum to match the particular fund which would be available under the Costigan-La Follette bill, the sum actually granted will be considerably reduced. I regard that as a very serious restriction. There is no such restriction in the substitute proposed by me.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from New York, of course, knows that under the pending bill money not distributed on the 40 per cent basis would be passed into a reserve fund, and that the reserve fund would be available for relief on the basis of need.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I think that is so. I have adopted a method of loans and advances, because Congress in the last session decided by an overwhelming vote that it would not authorize the appropriation of these funds except by way of loans or advances to the States, and I do not want to indulge in pure futilities. I do not see that it gets bread to the destitute to stand for some so-called principle of grants as against loans if, in the end, by pursuing that policy, we invite a veto and the hungry get nothing. I took a more pragmatic view of the situation. In my anxiety to see that funds were available for the needy and the destitute, I framed my legislation so as to secure congressional approval and approval at the White House.

Mr. President, in view of the expressions of the President in reference to all legislation of this character, we are simply courting a veto by insisting upon distributing these moneys as grants to the States rather than as loans. It is for that reason that I adopted the loan system.

This is even more than I had wanted to say, Mr. President, except to assure the Senate that there is just this choice between the two bills—namely, are you for an outright grant or are you for advances or loans to the States?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask the Senator one or two questions in order that I may get the difference between the measures clear in my own mind, and perhaps some others may be interested in the questions.

As I understand it, the administration, under the Senator's substitute, would be in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and under the Costigan-La Follette bill the administration would be by a board of three to be appointed by the President.

Mr. WAGNER. The distribution of the funds; yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is there any difference between the powers given to the board proposed to be set up under the Costigan-La Follette bill, and the powers to be given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with reference to distribution of funds and supervision of the distribution?

Mr. WAGNER. I could not call it any very great distinction. I think there is a little more detailed provision, requiring plans to be submitted by the States to the board of three, and supervision over the funds to be distributed by the States, which I do not think is present in my legislation, and I doubt whether the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would go quite as far in the way of supervising the distribution of the funds within the States as would the power of the board to be created under the Costigan-La Follette bill.

Mr. BLACK. I might state to the Senator that, as I view it, the powers are practically the same, and the Senator seems to concur in that interpretation.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not quite concur in that. I say that under the Costigan-La Follette bill the powers of actual supervision over the distribution of funds within the State are broader than under the bill which I have offered, and I can see a reason for that. Under the bill I have proposed, the money provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is an advance or a loan to the State, and it becomes the property of the State the moment it is transmitted; whereas under the Costigan-La Follette bill it is Federal money, and under the theory of that legislation the Federal Government has the ultimate power of distribution of the fund within the State. I do not think there is any question about that. I do not think that will be contested by the advocates of the measure.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We contend that the power over distribution would aid in the establishment of sound relief standards.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but the Senator does not dispute the statement that under his measure the distribution of the money would really be supervised and directed by the Federal Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not at all.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator does not dispute that, does he?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The immediate distribution of the funds would be thus supervised, but after the funds passed, the control, of course, would be vested in the separate States as fully as under the Senator's measure.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question, if he will permit, though it is probably directed to both Senators. As I understand it, the difference between the bills is that under the Wagner substitute, as we now have it, the State would receive the money and set up its own organization for the relief of the unemployed. That is our system now.

Mr. WAGNER. The money would be advanced to the States as loans or advances, and then it would become the property of the State, and the responsibility would be on the States to distribute it.

Mr. LONG. Under the La Follette-Costigan bill——

Mr. COSTIGAN. The same result would happen, under the condition that the States would submit in advance the plans under which they proposed to use the relief funds.

Mr. LONG. We do that now.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know what the Louisiana practice is, but the pending measure looks to that course.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the distribution is to be the same, and if everything else is to be the same, why the mysterious criticism that under my bill we would have a lowering of standards, and people going destitute and hungry without aid? What justification is there for the criticism that my proposal is an effort to lower the standards of aid to the needy of the States?

Mr. COSTIGAN and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to all Senators.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Permit me to say, before the Senator from Wisconsin speaks, that for seven months and more we have had in operation the loan practices of the Federal Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The results have been highly unsatisfactory for the reasons already assigned. It is the contention of those best informed in this field that if the Federal Government supervises the distribution of the funds, as in the case of other Federal State-aid acts, it can make more uniform the relief practices to be followed in the States, including the determination of actual relief needs, and can, without interfering with State control, set up highly desirable relief standards, many of which have been totally neglected under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment has expired. He has 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I will take my 30 minutes on the bill.

I want to ask the Senator from Colorado this question: If the bill which I propose contained a provision for a separate board, would that satisfy the Senator?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not at all. That would be an admirable addition to the Senator's substitute, but would not correct other defects.

Mr. WAGNER. In other words, the Senator is for a grant rather than for an advance or loan. Is not that the fact?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is one fact.

Mr. WAGNER. What else is there?

Mr. COSTIGAN. For one thing, the present law, which the Senator from New York desires to perpetuate, results in short-time advances, guarded by bankers, who are thinking in terms of loans rather than the needs of the unemployed, and people in distress are not receiving anything like the relief to which, by intent of the law we enacted, they are entitled. Overwhelming evidence so shows.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with the Senator, and I therefore view with a good deal of satisfaction the prospect that, after the 4th of March, there will be a rather more sympathetic administration. But I have inquired of a number of the States, and they have not found any fault with the methods in which their applications for funds for the destitute were handled.

I have an appreciation, I want to assure the Senator, of this whole situation. I am not an alarmist, but we have for some time been going along pursuing an aimless policy, putting our heads into the sand and refusing to see the actual facts. In my judgment, an examination of the economic statistics, and an observation of the present misery, as to the existence of which we do not need statistics, convince me that we are in a life and death struggle with the forces of social and economic dissolution; and unless we call upon all the resources of the people of the country, as well as of the Government, to join in this fray we can not prevent disintegration. No one can be more earnest than I am in desiring to bring about the maximum activity on the part of the Federal Government, first, to feed the needy and the destitute so that none shall go hungry or unsheltered; and second, to provide activities by way of a public-works program so as to afford opportunity for employment. We must do these things or we can not arrest the processes of disintegration. There can be no question about what my attitude upon this whole matter is, and I want to make certain that the necessary money will be made available. I am going to be practical enough to propose that sort of bill which will bring aid, and, at the same time, afford reasonable assurance that it will meet the approval of the White House.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, there is so much that the Senator from New York has said with which I agree that I hardly know where to begin to state my agreement. As to the economic dangers of the hour I am in entire concurrence with him.

As to the personal qualities of the incoming President of the United States I am also in complete accord, but I confess that I do not wish to deal with legislation on the principle that one President will favorably administer a law and another President will frown on its proper application for the benefit of society. A year ago we similarly met many hidden intimations as to what the President of the United States might do with relief legislation. I believed then as now that it is our duty to legislate, and it is the duty of the Chief Executive to deal with our measures as he deems best under the Constitution. Then as now I favored legislation which is scientific, sound, and humane.

I wish merely to repeat to the Senator from New York that the relief law under which we have been operating has wholly failed to meet the needs of the country. Uncounted thousands in America have been and are at this hour not receiving proper or any relief and are therefore driven to appeal for miserable pittances to the poor who are good to the poor. Under the loan principle in legislation I am convinced that we shall not reach anywhere the provision for the deserving people of the country that will be achieved under grants for aid provided for in the pending bill.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator appreciates there is no difference in the amount authorized in the two bills?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Only $200,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. No. The Senator's bill provides an authorization of $500,000,000 and my bill, including the amount still available with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, provides for $450,000,000. Furthermore, under the La Follette-Costigan bill $200,000,000 are subjected to severe restrictions, as I have already pointed out. The maximum difference between the two bills is $50,000,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I promised to yield to the Senator from Kentucky, and I do so now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the colloquy proceeding if it will clarify the situation. Unfortunately for me it has not done so yet. I want to see if I can ascertain just what are the points of difference. I understand the bill of the Senators from Colorado and Wisconsin provides outright an authorization, to be followed by an appropriation of $500,000,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. I say out of the Treasury. Of course, it is through the agency of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation prior to its extraction from the Treasury. It is coming from the Treasury, no matter whether it comes from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or outside of it. But it is a grant, not a loan—an outright grant from the Federal Government to the States, which is to be administered here in Washington primarily.

Mr. WAGNER. The plan is to be submitted to a separate board showing the method the States propose to use in distributing the funds.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is now done under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have simply increased the present $300,000,000 available, or that was available when we passed the bill last year, by another $300,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. That makes a total of $600,000,000 to be advanced to the States in the form of loans. We are still entertaining the hope it will be repaid, although we know it will not be.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me unfortunate that those of us who are so much concerned about relief should find differences as to the method of its administration. I am wondering whether the new plan suggested of a grant, and a requirement that plans for distribution shall be set up and submitted in advance, will in any way interfere with or operate to destroy or make useless the machinery that has already been set up in the States for the administration of the funds which have already been available. Unfortunately I was engaged elsewhere and did not hear the category of criticism made by the Senator from Colorado against the present method of distribution.

In my own State, with the exception of some dissatisfaction growing out of the fact that instead of paying money to the people they pay groceries and supplies, I have had no complaints as to the administration of the fund. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has completely and fully complied with the requests which have been made by the governor of my State, which have been based upon expert information obtained from all the counties, and that expert information brought to Washington and submitted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. With very few exceptions, it has been accepted by the authorities here and the loans or allotments made upon that basis.

So far as I am concerned, I would object to any scheme by which the expert forces that have already been set up in the States to gather information upon which to base the distribution of this relief are to be rendered useless and done away with in order that some other State officers or agencies may be set up in the States.

I am wondering in what particular there is a difference between the bills in that respect?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield further? He has been very generous.

Mr. WAGNER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish merely to say to the Senator from Kentucky that there will be no such scrapping of the existing machinery as he contemplates, because the pending bill provides that the governor shall designate the agency through which the Federal relief board is to turn over the money for distribution.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, we know that already they are submitting to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in advance in each county——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will take 10 minutes to read the report submitted by the committee, he will know all about the pending bill.

Mr. WAGNER. If that distribution is satisfactory, I do not see the point in setting up another bureau appointed by the President of the United States to do the same thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my difficulty.

Mr. WAGNER. However, I am really sorry that so much time is being taken up on the method of distribution. The fundamental question is, Are we prepared to abandon the theory of a loan or an advance to the States, to which we have adhered thus far, in favor of an outright grant to the States? That basically is the difference between the two bills. The other differences involve details which we are exaggerating and which are not really very important.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what it will lead to if we are now to depart from the theory of making loans and embark upon the absolute grant of money out of the Federal Treasury to the States. We must not overlook the fact that last week there was a delegation of mayors in the city of Washington who appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which the Senator and I are both members, asking that the Federal Government advance to those cities money out of the Federal Treasury with which to meet maturing obligations on their bonds. If we can do that as to past expenses, the next step will be to advance money out of the Treasury to carry on the cities in all of their relationships to the people in the communities where they exist.

I am wondering just how far we are going to be able to go in loading down the Treasury of the United States in Washington with the burden of operating all of the subdivisions of our Government, to wit, the States, counties, and cities.

Mr. WAGNER. As a matter of fact, the Senator should have added that one of the other proposals of the mayors called for loans to finance the operating expenses of the municipalities in addition to the meeting of maturities.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Treasury at Washington is to take over the operation of the cities, I suppose it would have the right to demand that whatever taxes are collected in those cities shall be turned over to the Federal Treasury as an offset against the expenses of operating the cities. If we are to start in on that sort of a program, we might as well abolish State lines and county lines, cities and municipalities, and say this is one large Federal Nation and all of its branches are to be operated here in Washington.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from New York will doubtless allow a word in reply. The Senator from New York has been contending that under his loan provisions we are to give the same relief aid to the States as under grants. If that be true, much of our discussion has been irrelevant. We are planning to relieve the hungry and starving in this country under either plan. Our contention is that we are going to do that better by grants than by loans.

In the State of Kentucky, under the loan plan, children have been going blind for lack of food and relief help. The real tragedy there, as I view it, is that under the loan law, as operated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, not enough money has been loaned to Kentucky to take care of these unfortunate victims of our economic depression. That is one of the defects we criticize in the law, but only one.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress put upon the shoulders of the governors of the States the obligation of asking for funds. The governor has asked for funds. In my State they have been granting every dollar the governor has asked for. He based his request on expert investigation and information, not furnished by State or county officials or by candidates for office, but by social workers who are trained in the art of understanding the needs of the people. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not loaned the money that was needed it has been either because the governor did not request it—and I am sure that he did request all that was represented to him as being needed—or we did not make enough money available in the first place for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to the States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As pointed out before the Senator from Kentucky entered the Chamber, there are some States from which no requests have come for funds, where nevertheless semistarvation exists. Under the loan act some governors have not applied for Federal aid, for one reason or other. Presumably they could not or would not commit the credit of the States for such loans or they concluded that the States would be so obligated to return borrowed funds and it was not desirable to make the necessary applications.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Senator what particular State has failed to make application because of the requirements of the law?

Mr. COSTIGAN. My statement was that presumably the requests had not been made because of constitutional restrictions or because of the obligation resting upon the State to return the funds.

Mr. WAGNER. But the Senator does not know of any case?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not attempt to speak for particular States. However, I understand that the State of New York, for one, made no such request until recently, because of constitutional restrictions, and because the head of that State would not take the pauper oath and go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with his hat in his hand. Yet the evidence shows that there are thousands of families in New York State which have not been receiving adequate or any relief under Reconstruction Finance Corporation management.

Mr. WAGNER. I can say, however, that New York State was given the loan it sought. It asked for a specific sum and that loan was made.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under a very recent request?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; a very recent request.

Mr. COSTIGAN. But for months and months, until the present Governor of New York came into office with his notably humanitarian outlook, no such request was made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. A State certainly is not to be criticised, nor the governor of that State, merely because he does not rush in as soon as the gate is open to get his share of the sum set apart by Congress. I think it is rather to the credit of any governor who did not apply for a loan until it was necessary to do so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No such criticism is justified by anything I said.

Mr. WAGNER. I might say so far as New York State is concerned that application was not made until it was absolutely necessary to seek the supplemental aid of the Federal Government because of the terrific burden which we have carried for several years.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have not been able to be here during the discussion which has occurred on this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. So I read.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] goes on to state that there are a number of people not receiving help under the present law, who, as I understand, he intends to take care of under his bill. Just wherein does the matter come in, whether it is a grant or a loan, by which, under the La Follette-Costigan bill, they are going to be taken care of? That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the first place, Mr. President, under the grant provisions of the pending bill there would be an outright appropriation of 40 per cent of the funds provided for to the various States, with a qualifying provision as to the amounts raised in the separate States. There would be an immediate sum of money placed in the hands of the governor of each State of the Union for relief purposes. The balance of the money would go into what is termed a "reserve fund" to be used on the basis of need.

At present nothing may be secured under our relief law for unfortunates where relief is urgently needed, except through applications for loans, which may or may not be granted by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There is one distinguishing feature.

Beyond that, there is under the pending bill better opportunity for expert management. Surveys would doubtless be made of human needs, and relief standards provided more effectively to take care of those who are starving.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield further, I happen to know that my State was the first one that received one of these relief loans. We had had a welfare organization in Louisiana administering a fund which had been raised by private subscription. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation adopted the same system which we had been using to dispense the funds under the Wagner bill, and I have been told that that is the basis on which a large majority of the States have been dispensing the funds. I have not been able to see any material difference. We do not ever expect to pay that money back; we have borrowed it, and we say it is a loan; but we know we are never going to pay it back, as the Senator from Kentucky says. So I do not see what difference it really makes. I do not think a governor will hesitate to ask for it under either one. I can not see why he should. The provision as to 20 per cent of the Federal relief funds for public roads does not mean anything to anybody. I do not see the difference. I may be wrong and I may not understand the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield further——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Louisiana certainly sees the difference between funds passed out by those who treat and use those funds with a banker's caution and funds used with a view to human relief. This is the most notable difference between the two proposals. No one has been more frankly critical of Reconstruction Finance Corporation management under the present relief act than the Senator from New York in the past. He led the protests on this floor on December 19 last, and insisted that the hour had come for an expert board to take charge of Federal relief, so that we might have an end to the present penny-pinching attitude in passing out relief aid.

In the case of Louisiana doubtless similar results would be attained after you had in your hands the amounts allotted for relief.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I might say to the Senator from Louisiana that——

Mr. LONG. Please do not read the figures.

Mr. WAGNER. I will have to read them. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already advanced for the relief of the destitute in the State of Louisiana the sum of $4,751,333.

Mr. LONG. I understand it has loaned $6,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. The State has received $2,000,000 since?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. GLASS. The figures I have here show the loan to have been $7,600,000.

Mr. LONG. I do not think we would get very much under this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators will address the Chair.

Mr. LONG. I beg pardon. If the Senator from New York will yield further, I desire to say that we have received in Louisiana between six and seven million dollars. Now, as I understand, my State would get, under the La Follette bill, around $3,000,000, would it not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is, I believe, under the 40 per cent provision.

Mr. WAGNER. And the State would have to match that.

Mr. LONG. We would have to match it.

Mr. WAGNER. The State would have to match it 100 for 60.

Mr. LONG. We can not match anything.

Mr. COSTIGAN. But the State would not have to match a penny if it could not do so.

Mr. LONG. If we made a pauper's oath to show that we could not.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The State would apply for relief under the reserve fund.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, has my time expired?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has one more minute.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to ask me a question?

Mr. GLASS. I do not think the Senator could answer the question that I propose to ask in one minute.

Mr. WAGNER. I surrender the floor.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the question I intended to ask the Senator from New York, which he may answer in my time, is, Where do Senators expect this money to come from? Is it to be picked out of the air or is it to be donated to us by some foreign government? We talk about aiding the States, but it has puzzled me to determine just precisely how it is aiding the States if we tax the people of the States, bring their revenues here and impound them in the Federal Treasury, and then erect a Federal system of distribution of money that we have taken from the States, doling it out to States as the judgment of these Federal minions may dictate.

I conceive the idea that the people of Virginia, through their State administrative authorities, are vastly more competent to determine the needs of that State than is any Federal board instituted here at Washington. After all, the only way for the Federal Government to get any money, unless resort is had to the printing-press expedient, is to take it from the pockets of the taxpayers of the respective 48 States; and it is beyond my human wit to determine how we are aiding the States when we first take the money from their taxpayers, bring it here to Washington, and then, as I have said, dispense it in driblets back to the States as the humanitarian instincts or judgment of a Federal board may suggest.

One of the Senators has suggested that he does not expect his State to pay this money back, and I do not either. I note here, and I am ashamed to note it, that the State of Virginia has borrowed $2,700,000 from this fund. I would feel utterly ashamed of Virginia if I could think that she was not able and competent to take care of her destitute without coming here to Washington like a mendicant, hat in hand, and asking for what? For a Federal fund? Yes; but a Federal fund acquired first from the taxpayers of Virginia, for the only way the Federal Government can ever get any money into its Treasury is by taxing the people of Virginia and the American people generally.

The administrative officers of Virginia are better able to determine the processes of humanitarian aid to destitute people than is any board that we may constitute here in Washington. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds that have been distributed in my State have been distributed by persons of intimate and expert knowledge of conditions there, by persons who may not be easily imposed upon, by persons who can not be misled by this often exaggerated humanitarian plea. My humanitarian instincts were taken advantage of last week by a fellow who got $10 of my money—and did not deserve 10 cents of it [laughter]—by telling me that he had his wife and children in an automobile in front of the Senate Office Building and they were without anything to eat, when in fact he had no wife and no children. [Laughter.] That sort of thing could not occur in Virginia in the distribution of Virginia funds that had first been taker out of the pockets of the taxpayers of Virginia and impounded here in the Federal Treasury, to be dispensed either by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or by this additional Federal institution called a board of distribution. So I would be very much obliged to any Senator who could convince me that this is aid to the States rather than a very expensive method of distributing funds first collected from the taxpayers of the States.

Mr. President, I have cast my last vote in the Senate for these temporary expedients providing so-called relief. If I could, I would vote to-morrow to abolish the so-called Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It has not been a reconstruction finance corporation; it has been a "destruction corporation." It has merely deferred the agony, postponed the pay day for all except those States that do not expect to pay this money back, and that will not pay it back. By alarmists we here have been hurried into the passage of measures tendered for curative purposes, but which in the end are proving, and are going to continue to prove, worse than the disease sought to be cured. I am not going to vote for any more of them. I am going to vote first for the proposed amendment, with a suggested modification, of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and then I am going to vote against the whole thing. [Laughter.] So much for the vocal aspects of the case.

I now wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that he has a provision in his amendment and in his proposed substitute which I think is of a very dangerous nature. That is the requirement that these loans of State money back to the States shall bear a rate of interest not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent more than the rate of interest established for the last issue of bonds of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. GLASS. I am reading from page 4 of the substitute, but I have indicated the text of the requirement. That is to say, this money of the States, accumulated here in the Federal Treasury, may be loaned back to the States at a rate of interest not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent above the interest rate established by the last preceding bond issue of the Federal Government.

If we adopt that suggestion, there is not a State nor a community in a State that will issue its own securities to meet the requirements of the State or community. Every township, city, community, and State will come here to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or from the board proposed by the other bill, rather than to issue its own bonds, because there is not a State or a community that very likely will be able to issue its own securities at as low a rate as this proposed provision would require.

For example, only the other day, in consultation with a gentleman who is soon to assume the office of Chief Magistrate, he sought my judgment as to whether it might be possible to float a 5-year Federal bond issue at 2½ per cent. I did not think it might be so.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no, no. I am obliged to the Senator, but I do not want to trouble Senators to come here to hear what I have to say. I gave it as my judgment that it would be an exceedingly difficult thing to do, because of the fact that every day we are proposing raids here upon the Federal Treasury. Suggestions are being offered involving the very integrity and honor, as well as the credit, of this Nation.

The mortgage-bond market already has been wrecked, so that no person with funds to invest who is yet outside the lunatic asylum would have so little sense as to invest in mortgage bonds, when the Congress and the legislatures and the governors are assuming the function of declaring moratoriums on credits. The Federal land-bank bonds are to-day at a frightful discount, although they are exempt from taxation; and but for the general misapprehension that these securities are guaranteed by the Federal Government—which is not true—their market value would be infinitely lower to-day than it is. The land banks have not been able to sell one of their bonds now for nearly three years. They could not sell one to-day to save their lives.

For these and a multiplicity of other reasons that might be cited here, I say it is very doubtful whether the Federal Government could issue a 5-year bond at any 2½ per cent interest rate. But, assuming that it could do so, then the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in one case and the Federal board of distribution in another case, would loan the funds of the States thus acquired at 3 per cent. Does the Senator from New York imagine that the great metropolis from which he comes could to-morrow float its bonds for 3 per cent?

Mr. WAGNER. It could in normal times.

Mr. GLASS. I am talking about now. I am not talking about normal times. We have not had normal times for 10 years.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes!

Mr. GLASS. No; we have not. We had an era of insane gambling and speculation for 10 years that eventuated in the crash that any man of discernment should have foreseen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. He has 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. GLASS. I shall not require that long, Mr. President.

The Senator from New York knows perfectly well that New York City could not float its bonds to-morrow at 3 per cent; and why should it, when it may come here to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and borrow millions of dollars at a lower rate of interest, or come to this humanitarian outfit that is about to be set up?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. If we had a normal bond market, where issues could be had at the normal rate of 3 or 3½ per cent, we never would have erected the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. GLASS. We never should have erected it.

Mr. WAGNER. That is a difference of opinion. I do not know where we would be without it.

Mr. GLASS. I know where we would be. We would be on the road to recovery in this country if we had never erected the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. WAGNER. After many a tragedy.

Mr. GLASS. Could we have any greater tragedy than we are experiencing right now?

Mr. WAGNER. I think we might have had.

Mr. GLASS. No, Mr. President! We have set a precedent that will return to plague Congress for the next half-century or more. Every contemplated raid on the Federal Treasury, every proposed exhaustion of the taxpayers' funds brought here to Washington has for its excuse now, "You have loaned hundreds of millions of dollars to railroads; you have loaned other hundreds of millions of dollars to decrepit banks, and there is no reason why you should not loan hundreds of millions of dollars to us." That is the cry, until we are rapidly approaching the point where the credit of this Nation will be impaired, and we will not have any "normal times" for a long time to come.

In setting up this abominable home-loan bank, people talk about homes as if one that was sold under mortgage disappeared from the face of the earth, instead of being bought by some worthy person to live in—some person who exercised great discernment and a greater degree of thrift than the man who procured the mortgage on his home in order that he might ride in an automobile and spend the proceeds of the mortgage for gasoline.

Mr. WAGNER. We are on common ground now.

Mr. GLASS. Building new homes! We had better be able to rent those that we already have. I can not rent mine, and if the Senator has one he can not rent his.

Mr. WAGNER. I have not any.

Mr. GLASS. We talk about railroad receiverships as if when a railroad is put in the hands of a receiver it disappears from the face of the earth; as if the receiver does not have to hire engineers and firemen and brakemen and conductors and trackwalkers and clerks. The only thing he does not have to do is to pay $150,000 salary to a president. We imagine, it seems, that the railroad disappears physically from the face of the earth when it goes into the hands of a receiver. I will tell the Senator from New York that the only way we are ever going to get a reconstruction, a reorganization of the exaggerated financial set-up of these railroads, is to put some of them, many of them, in the hands of receivers.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator is talking to me as if I were in disagreement with him upon that proposition. I am not a defender of the loans to the railroads; quite the contrary. We are on common ground in the present criticism of the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. I am glad to know that I have the academic sympathy of the Senator from New York; but when it comes to the practical part of it, when it comes to appropriating other millions of dollars——

Mr. WAGNER. To put people to work.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, to put people to work! They are being put to work on the roads in my State, and Virginia is going to pay it back. It is the only State in the Union that has reduced its public indebtedness during this time of depression. Its bonds stand at par in the money market; and I am ashamed of it when it comes up here and borrows $2,700,000 from this abominable Reconstruction Finance Corporation to put people to work on roads. We have converted every hog path in the State into a hard-surfaced boulevard. [Laughter.]

But to get back to this unhappy proposed provision of the law not permitting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to charge an interest rate in excess of one-half of 1 per cent above that of the latest bond issue of the United States, it is nothing in the world but an engraved invitation to every State and every community in the States to do its borrowing here from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation instead of issuing its own securities and selling them on the open market. Why, even your land banks charge 1 per cent above the rate of their last issue of bonds.

A Senator suggests to me in private conversation that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been charging an excessive rate of interest. Well, if the loans are not going to be paid back, as some Senators suggest, what difference does it make? [Laughter.] I say that if we can not trust the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to deal with this matter in a businesslike as well as in a humanitarian way, then we ought to get another board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; if we do not adopt my saner view of abolishing the whole contraption. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. I just want to observe that the statement I made was not my own statement alone. It was also the statement of the Senators from Virginia and Kentucky.

Mr. GLASS. I did not relate the statement to Virginia.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. We do not want to get confused in our statements. The reference of the Senator was to the amount advanced for the relief of the destitute and the needy, which is an entirely different proposition from that with which the Senator is dealing. As to the amounts advanced to relieve destitution and need, the law now fixes the rate of interest at 3 per cent. They could not go beyond that. This deals with advances and loans for public projects needful and in the public interest.

Mr. GLASS. That I know, and any State that is reduced to that degree of penury that it has to come here and ask for a return of a part of the money its taxpayers have paid into the Federal Treasury ought to be required to pay a reasonable interest rate, and the proposed rate would not be a reasonable interest rate. I think that is a reasonable rate which honorable business men, constituted with the serious duty of administering the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, may determine to be in the circumstances the proper interest rate. We may not intelligently determine that here. The board of directors of the corporation must determine that as circumstances warrant it should be determined.

Oh, I look over this list, and see the name of the great State of Pennsylvania, second in population and in wealth, if not first, among all the States of the Union, coming here to Washington to borrow $26,000,000 of the taxpayers' money from the Federal Treasury to take care of the destitute in that State. I venture to say that there is not a respectable community in the United States with any humanitarian spirit whatsoever that is unable to take care of its destitute, not one. The great State of New York is modest beyond compare when contrasted with Pennsylvania; it borrows $6,000,000. Where do we get the $26,000,000 and the $6,000,000? We take it out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the State of the Senator from New York more largely than from the taxpayers of any other State, because the taxpayers of his State have taken it out of the pockets of all the people of the country put together.

I hope the Senator will regard my suggestion with some degree of toleration that this provision of the bill ought to be stricken out, and that we should continue to confide to the business as well as to the humanitarian instincts of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the duty of lending this money at a reasonable rate of interest, as the circumstances may determine.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have exhausted my time. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I shall not agree to a proposal to strike out the section altogether unless the Senate insists upon that procedure. I am quite willing, however, to extend the spread from one-half of 1 per cent to 1 per cent, which would, under present circumstances, bring the rate up to 4 per cent. Of course, the Senator does not believe in the philosophy of this whole proposition of permitting municipalities and States——

Mr. GLASS. I do not think it has any philosophy. The Senator means the fancy of it.

Mr. WAGNER. No; I do not. I think it is the only way we have now available to put people back to work, and to start on our road to recovery. No one has suggested an alternative. But the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has operated its functions as an ultraconservative business institution, looking for large profits, instead of charging a fair rate of interest above that which they pay for the money, so that the municipalities may get the money at a rate which the municipalities in normal times could secure in the open market. Instead of that, they have made it impossible for these municipalities to accept the loans because of the high rate of interest imposed, 5½ and 6 per cent, which is 2 to 3 per cent more than the municipalities are required to pay in the open market in normal times.

We created this instrumentality to take the place of sources of aid in normal times, to help the communities to further their projects, to put people to work, in order to help in this difficult situation, to give people employment rather than charity. I think the country is in favor of that policy, irrespective of the opinion of the Senator from Virginia, from whom I rarely differ.

Mr. GLASS. I do not think the country knows anything about it, and I have come to the conclusion that we knew so little about it as that we permitted ourselves to be rushed off of our feet to adopt all of these psychological expedients or, as I once called them, psychological poultices.

I recall that the State of South Carolina, which has maintained its financial integrity and credit for years, was unable to float an issue of $500,000 of 5 per cent bonds for constructive purposes in that State in 1929. Yet here now it is proposed that we invite South Carolina, and States and communities similarly situated, to come to Washington and borrow back the money which they have paid into the Federal Treasury at one-half of 1 per cent more than the next succeeding bond issue, whatever that may be.

Mr. WAGNER. Prior bond issue.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; prior to this loan. That is the next succeeding bond issue, unless the distinguished Senator from New York imagines that the Federal Government can go on paying out millions upon millions of dollars without engaging in another bond issue.

Mr. WAGNER. I think these enterprises, if they are inaugurated, will so stimulate business, so prime the pump, that there will be no difficulty in collecting taxes. I do not want to interrupt the Senator any further——

Mr. GLASS. I have about concluded. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to say this, that witnesses appeared before our committee from all over the country, and they had a list of interest charges in normal times to municipalities and to some States on money borrowed to finance their own projects, and in many cases the rates were below 3 per cent, and were rarely ever above 4 per cent. If the language here is changed to read " 1 per cent above the interest rate of the last bond issue," we will permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to charge 4 per cent for loans, which is as high as it ought to go.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I am in favor either of discharging the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or permitting them to exercise their business judgment upon these loans as circumstances require, and I think they can do it a long way more intelligently than we can.

Talk about normal times! Have we done normal things under the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? Sixty-five million dollars of the taxpayers' money has been loaned to build a concrete bridge across San Francisco Bay, and millions upon millions of dollars for projects of that kind. The people from my State have come here to get my influence—which I do not possess—to have bridges built across the James River, and the York River, and the Potomac River.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, would the Senator stop all progress?

Mr. GLASS. No; but I would stop all raids on the Federal Treasury if I could.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator, who has had long experience in banking, if he has reached any estimate as to the number of securities the Federal Government will be able to sell?

Mr. GLASS. If we keep on at the present rate, it will not be able to sell any.

Mr. COUZENS. Is there any limit, in the Senator's mind, as to what we might be able to sell?

Mr. GLASS. I understand we will have to fund $600,000,000 of bonds by the 15th day of March. I do not know at what rate of interest that may be done. We will have in a brief period of time to fund $6,000,000,000 of maturing Government bonds. I do not know at what rate that may be done. We will have in the not very distant future to fund $11,000,000,000 of Government bonds, and if we keep on raiding the Federal Treasury——

Mr. COUZENS. We have now outstanding, in all forms of securities, nearly $21,000,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator believe we could continue to extend that amount until we reached $35,000,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps so, unless we are to adopt some of the suggestions that have been presented here. Undertake a devaluation of the gold dollar by curtailing its grain content 30 per cent, and I do not think we would be able to sell another Federal bond at any rate of interest. Undertake by legislation to dishonor this Nation, to say that the requirements denominated in the bonds—$21,000,000,000 of them outstanding—shall not be complied with; undertake to assume authority as has been suggested may be done, to vitiate millions of business contracts that have the gold payment denominated in the bond, mortgage, and other bonds, and the Federal Government will not be able to sell anything, but, on the contrary, there will not be enough free gold left in this country with which to do the dentistry work. In 60 days we would wipe out our Treasury gold reserve, and would wipe out the gold reserve of the banks.

There are in process now demands for redemption. In one great city on last Friday $3,000,000 of currency, paper promises to pay, were exchanged for gold for the strong boxes, and the following day a greater sum, and if we keep on at this rate God only knows how long the credit of the Federal Government may be maintained.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator states that breaking up private contracts would lead toward this terrible result he mentions. Did we not break up many private contracts in 1920 and 1921, when fares were fixed by contract and rates were fixed by contract, thousands and probably hundreds of thousands of them, and because the dollar was worth only 60 cents, did not the Supreme Court of the United States say they had to yield to regulation, and did it not strike them all out? What is the difference now, when the dollar is worth $1.66, if regulation does the same thing?

Mr. GLASS. I observe a great deal of difference. I am not to be drawn off into this hypothetical discussion. The Senator from Michigan, who is a practical business man, asked me a common-sense question and I tried to give him a common-sense answer.

Mr. LONG. I do not suppose the Supreme Court's answer was any good in 1920. I do not suppose the Supreme Court's answer in 1921 was common sense, but they did what I have stated.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I have known some people to question the common sense of the Supreme Court, and I do not believe the Supreme Court has ever rendered any decision that resulted in the vitiation of a contract, because they could not constitutionally do it. But happily I am not a constitutional lawyer.

But again I appeal to the Senator from New York to leave the determination of practical matters like this to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, should his substitute prevail, and to the business instinct of the proposed new corporation should the Costigan-La Follette proposal prevail, because they can better determine the matter than we may do here. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to be obstinate about any provision——

Mr. GLASS. I know none of us ever is.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to be, except that all of the efforts of Congress to bring about a large program of municipal and public works have been frustrated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in charging what I regard under present conditions as exorbitant rates of interest. It was in order to control that by at least fixing a maximum that I put that provision in the bill. If the Senator feels that a restriction ought not to be placed upon the loans and it ought to be left to the discretion of the board, I shall not complain one way or the other.

Mr. GLASS. I am glad to have that assurance from the Senator. As a matter of fact when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans $65,000,000 to build a bridge, I think they ought to get a pretty stiff rate of interest on a loan of that sort, and on loans for many of the other projected public works.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The trouble is that we do not know what kind of a rate of interest they will charge, whether it may be small or what. It seems to me a tremendous power to give these people.

Mr. GLASS. The fact that they have not charged a lower rate of interest than that proposed prompts my suggestion. As a matter of fact the complaint of the Senator from New York and those who inspired this suggestion is that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has charged a rate of interest which will give some slight assurance that it is not going to lose the taxpayers' money. The Senator from New York talks about conducting the business with an eye to profit. I would like to contribute to a fund to buy a microscope powerful enough to discover any profit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will ever get out of the business.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with the Senator in that respect. I think a large amount of the debate that has been going on for the last day or two on this question as between the two propositions is not very conclusive, for the reason, whether we adopt the one plan or the other, we are not going to get this money back, in all probability.

Mr. GLASS. I am not prepared to dispute that. Pride of State makes me believe and here declare that the Federal Government will get back Virginia's loan. If not, I shall be much more ashamed of her than I ever expect to be.

Mr. BORAH. Where is the pride of a great State which comes down here and asks a loan of $26,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. There is not any. That is what I complain of. We have wiped out all State pride in this country and become a nation of mendicants.

Mr. BORAH. Where is pride of State when the great bankers come down here and ask the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan a railroad company $24,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. What has become of the sanity of the administrators of the railroads when they come here and ask us to make loans to the railroads without any collateral security at all? It reminds me of an episode in my own life, when I was addressing the Chicago Association of Commerce in 1914. My companion on the rostrum was Private John Allen, of Mississippi. He told the assembled audience that he had been induced to come there for two reasons only. One was to correct a painful impression that had gotten abroad; that as he was approaching Tupelo a few days theretofore a stranger approached him and asked him the name of the town and he told him. He said, "Yes; Tupelo. That is where John Allen used to live. Poor old fellow; he is dead now." Private John Allen wanted to correct that impression.

Then he said; "I wanted to meet the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives face to face and insist to him that the Federal reserve act should be so modified as to permit a man to borrow money from a bank without collateral and, if the bank insisted upon collateral, to declare in the statute that the borrower should be the judge of his own collateral." [Laughter.]

The railroads are now taking that view, that they should be loaned the taxpayers' money without any collateral whatsoever. The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr.

COUZENS] who now rises to his feet, has reported to us that upon his examination he finds that the collateral already lodged is inadequate for its purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator from Virginia support an amendment to the pending bill to repeal the provision of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act which permits it to loan to railroads?

Mr. GLASS. I will.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Virginia has expired.

Mr. GLASS. I am glad of it! [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the Wagner amendment, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place insert the following:

SEC. —. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $25,000,000, under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as amended, to any public or private hospital organized under the laws of any State upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations as are applicable in the case of loans to financial institutions specified in section 5 of such act, as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] as amended.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 25, after the so-called Wagner amendment, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall be construed to permit the governor of any State to use, under supervision of the State highway department, such loan in the improvement of highways as a part of his work-relief plan.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand the amendment now pending is in the nature of a substitute?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the original amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to the amendment of the committee, which was reconsidered.

Mr. WAGNER. I would suggest to the Senator from Arizona that I do not deal with the subject that he desires to amend in the original amendment which I have offered. That will come subsequently, when I offer the substitute.

Mr. HAYDEN. Very well; I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from New York as amended.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The provision which has just been discussed by the Senator from Virginia is that to which the amendment relates. The amendment which I now offer is to strike out the matter to which the Senator from Virginia has objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Ohio proposes in title 2 of the so-called Wagner amendment, page 4, lines 15 to 21, both inclusive, to strike out the following:

Provided further, That each loan made under paragraphs (1) to (5) of subsection (a) of this section after this subsection, as amended, takes effect, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent more than the rate of interest established for the last issue of bonds of the United States preceding the making of such loan.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator's amendment propose to strike out of the bill that part which limits the rate of interest that may be charged to one-half of 1 per cent over the rate of interest on the last issue of Government bonds?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. LONG. May I ask the Senator if that is his amendment?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. I certainly hope the amendment will not be adopted. I hope the Senator is not serious in offering the amendment. The Senator from New York proposed to increase the rate of interest to 1 per cent above that obtained on the last issue of bonds, but I was hoping that he would not do that. That would not be particularly objectionable, however.

Mr. WAGNER. May I suggest that if the amendment is defeated I had intended to offer an amendment extending the rate from one-half of 1 per cent to 1 per cent above that borne by the last bond issue.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, would not the Senator from New York prefer to perfect his amendment before the vote is taken on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LONG. I hope that will be done.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have no objection to that procedure if I do not lose the opportunity to offer my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his amendment temporarily. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the amendment which I have offered may be again amended, on page 4, line 19, by striking out the words "one-half of." That would leave the rate at 1 per cent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York to his original amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. I now offer the amendment to strike out the proviso to which my amendment relates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be again reported.

The Chief Clerk again stated the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not suppose it is necessary, but the Senator from New York has amended his amendment so that the rate of interest to be borne by the Government on loans made to the States is 1 per cent more than the Government pays for the money. What the amendment of the Senator from Ohio would do would be simply to leave it to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to fix its own rate of interest. That might be 10 per cent for Maine, 3 per cent for Virginia, 12 per cent for Michigan, or any rate they want to fix. I think this ought to be a standard rate, and a reasonable rate. One per cent over the amount the Government itself pays for the money, if we are going to lend money, is sufficiently high.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] the purpose of section 28, on page 5, where $5,000,000 is made available for establishing credit insurance organizations or for their benefit. Why is that necessary in this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, representatives of some of the insurance organizations came before the committee and said that at the present time, because of the condition of the market, they were unable to secure insurance to insure the payment of credits upon our exports. They urge that for a temporary time they thought the Government ought to include that particular line.

Mr. DICKINSON. Why should the Government assume that responsibility?

Mr. WAGNER. For the same reason that we are aiding banks and other financial institutions and helping to finance agricultural exports at present through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We are doing the same thing for surplus agricultural products; they are being financed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is my impression that this provision merely provides additional funds whereby there may be paid premiums for certain insurance organizations that otherwise might not be able to carry on certain types of insurance business. I see no real reason why this provision should be in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think the Senator's criticism is justified.

Mr. DICKINSON. What security do they put up for this money?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. They are required to give adequate security.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a general provision of the law which requires adequate security for all loans. I tried to make it plain on several occasions that there is an omnibus provision in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act that no loan shall be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation except upon adequate security; so that, whatever the nature of the loan is, it must be adequately secured or it can not be granted.

Mr. DICKINSON. The provision reads:

for the purpose of enabling and assisting established credit insurance organizations in the United States to provide export credit guaranties upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed agreed upon—

It would look as though these organizations are to be paid for a special service.

Mr. WAGNER. It is a loan like other loans, I may say to the Senator. Whether he agrees to that particular policy or whether the Senate agrees is another proposition, but the loans can not be granted except adequate security is given to the Government. The idea was to encourage the export of our commodities. That is the explanation which was made before the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York whether it is his purpose to incorporate in the amendment in the nature of a substitute he is about to offer the amendments which were agreed to on Saturday—to the amendment which has just been adopted to the pending bill?

Mr. WAGNER. It is.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The reason why I asked the question is that my colleague [Mr. BLAINE], who is detained to-day because of critical illness in his family, offered an amendment on Saturday to the amendment which has just been adopted, and he is not here to offer it at this time to the Senator's amendment in the nature of a substitute. I wondered whether the Senator intended to incorporate in the substitute all the amendments which have been adopted to his amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I was going to ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I am about to offer in the nature of a substitute may be so modified as to embrace all the amendments which have been adopted to the amendment just agreed to. In that form I now offer the amendment in the nature of a substitute. Do I make myself clear?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not quite get what the Senator desires.

Mr. WAGNER. I have a few moments' time, and I shall prepare the amendment as proposed to be modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I wish to make a motion to strike from the proposed substitute all of section 14 on page 8, beginning in line 17. That was the amendment that was just discussed by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. I make the motion that that section, embracing subsection (k), may be eliminated from the bill. It reads as follows:

SEC. 14. Section 201 of such act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make available out of the funds of the corporation a sum not exceeding $5,000,000, which may be used by the corporation for the purpose of enabling and assisting established credit insurance organizations in the United States to provide export credit guaranties upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the corporation and such credit insurance organizations."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STEIWER. Is an amendment now in order to the amendment in the nature of a substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to that amendment is now in order.

Mr. STEIWER. I send to the desk, then, the following amendment and ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Oregon offers the following amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

At the proper place it is proposed to insert the following:

TITLE III—ADVANCES TO RECLAMATION FUND

SEC. —. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon request of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized and empowered to advance from funds made available by section 2 of the act of January 22, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 5), to the reclamation fund created by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L. 388), such sum or sums as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary for the completion of projects or divisions of projects now under construction. Funds so advanced shall be repaid out of any receipts and accretions accruing to the reclamation fund within such time as may be fixed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, not exceeding five years from the date of advance, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. Sums so advanced may be expended in the same way as other moneys in the reclamation fund.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation of this proposal. The language of the amendment which I have offered is identical with Senate bill 5607, which was introduced by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. That bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, from which the Wagner relief bill also comes. The Committee on Banking and Currency authorized a favorable report upon the bill, and that favorable report was made earlier to-day. So the proposal is now before the Senate with a favorable report of the committee.

The object, and the only object, of this proposal is to enable the Reclamation Service to complete projects which are presently under construction. The amendment submitted by me does not involve any additional project or any change in policy or any extension of the reclamation program. Every project for which relief is contemplated under this amendment is a project already authorized by law; every project, with some slight exceptions, which would be benefited by this proposal is a project for which there is a contract presently existing for the construction of the works.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I will yield in just a moment. Every project for which relief is contemplated under this proposal is a project for which an estimate has already been made by the Interior Department and for which an estimate has already been submitted, in many cases, to the Bureau of the Budget, and has been approved by the Bureau of the Budget; and in very many cases all the items that would be included in the loans contemplated by this amendment are items which are covered by the Department of Interior appropriation bill, which was recently passed by the Senate and which, as I understand, is now a law.

The only reason why it is necessary to offer this amendment at this time is that the appropriations made by the Congress for the construction of the reclamation projects are made from a special fund. If they were made from the general fund, of course, the money would be taken out of the Treasury, and it would now be available for the Reclamation Service, but because those appropriations are made from a special revolving fund, they are available only in the event that money is in the special fund at the time it is required.

By the moratorium bill which Congress enacted during the last session the revenues that normally go into that special fund have been very greatly curtailed, and the Reclamation Bureau finds itself at this time in this situation: They have projects authorized and under construction, with contracts made and with appropriations approved by the Bureau of the Budget and actually made by the Congress of the United States, but still the bureau is not able to keep faith in meeting the obligations under its own contracts.

This amendment, Mr. President, would be one form of loan that would be repaid. If the Congress should see fit to add the amendment to the substitute offered by the Senator from New York, we would be creating one class of loans that would be repaid, because they would constitute preferred claims in a moral sense at least, against the reclamation fund; and those in charge of that fund would be able, under any kind of conditions, even under the conditions of this day, to guarantee the return of these loans. Now I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I was going to suggest to the Senator that, of course, the committee has had no chance to study the proposal of the Senator, nor have I, as the sponsor of the legislation, had such an opportunity; and the amendment is brought in now at the last moment, when it seems to me it is rather late to incorporate it in the legislation which is pending. I think at least the committee ought to have an opportunity to study the proposed amendment and its effect. If it is merely to supplement an appropriation already made, it ought to be proposed, it seems to me, in the form of separate legislation and not be made a part of the pending bill. It does not seem to me to be pertinent to the subject matter with which we are dealing.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I will defer replying to the Senator from New York for just a moment until I have yielded to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator's explanation, the money that he proposes to have advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is in anticipation of an appropriation later to be received from the Government?

Mr. STEIWER. The appropriation has been made in the Department of the Interior appropriation bill of this year.

Mr. COUZENS. Why is it not available?

Mr. STEIWER. It is not available because it is an appropriation out of the special revolving fund. The appropriations for the Reclamation Service are not made, as Senators know, from the general funds of the Treasury, but are made from a special revolving fund. There is no money in that fund at this time sufficient in amount to enable the United States to keep its obligations under its own contracts.

Mr. COUZENS. What will replenish the fund of the Reclamation Service which has now been exhausted?

Mr. STEIWER. That special revolving fund will be replenished by repayments by settlers, by oil royalties, and by the proceeds of the sale of public lands.

Mr. COUZENS. Has the Senator any estimate of the amount involved or does the bill of which the amendment is a copy, state the sum?

Mr. STEIWER. The bill does not state the amount in express terms, but the Interior Department estimates that it will require about $5,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. In other words, in spite of the depressed condition of industry and all that, the Senator contemplates that the reclamation fund will be sufficiently replenished so as to enable repayment to be made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the loans which it may advance?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; that is contemplated. Of course the Reclamation Bureau would be obliged to take out of their revenues a sufficient amount to pay this obligation.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; but I understand that the basic principle is that the reclamation fund will be built up through collections from people who are already unable to pay.

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no, Mr. President. Even under present conditions, as the economic situation now exists, we have been receiving substantial sums into the reclamation fund. They come from sales of public lands, from oil royalties, and partly from the payments made by settlers. I have no doubt that the settlers on many of the projects of this country could have kept up their payments, which are small on the part of each individual settler; but Congress itself, by the moratorium bill agreed to in the last Congress, has extended deferments in payment; and by our own action we have robbed that fund of its normal income.

Let me say, in further answer, that the total amount in the revolving fund of the Reclamation Bureau, subject, of course, to certain write-offs for losses, is something like $160,000,000. In the old days $20,000,000 was appropriated for a loan to that fund. Of that $20,000,000 substantially $10,000,000 was repaid; and then two years ago, I believe, Congress authorized a further loan of $5,000,000 from the Treasury to the reclamation fund. So at this time the obligation of the reclamation fund to the Treasury is substantially, if not exactly, $15,000,000.

This proposal does not take the money out of the Treasury. It takes it from the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for the first time in history, I believe, would require interest to be paid by the Reclamation Bureau upon the Federal money so advanced.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand the situation, Congress last year passed an act extending the time when these payments by settlers and these other resources would be available. How long does that extension last?

Mr. STEIWER. I think the repayments under the bill of last year start either this year or in 1934. I am not sure whether it falls in the fiscal year or the calendar year, so I can not answer exactly.

Mr. FLETCHER. So what the Senator calls a moratorium expires next year probably?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the meantime there would be no funds coming into that special fund?

Mr. STEIWER. Such little funds as come from oil royalties and the sale of public lands, of course, are coming in at all times.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator's amendment require that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation must look to that special fund for a return of the money that they advance?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes. It also provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall prescribe the time for the repayment of the money.

Mr. FLETCHER. We do not want to pay twice. We do not want to make another donation to the fund.

Mr. STEIWER. This proposal comes from the Interior Department. I understand that the Senator from Utah introduced the bill S. 5601 upon the urgent insistence of the Interior Department that unless this loan could be made they would be obliged to default in their contracts, and I want the Senate to know what that means. It means, in the first place, that the contractors would have claims against the United States on account of the breach by the United States Government. It means, above that, that those who are employed, and who number more than 2,000, would be thrown into the unemployed out in desert countries where there is no work for anybody and little chance for relief. It means, still above that, that something like 10,000 settlers who have moved on the projects in reliance upon the faith of the United States Government, and who have been taught to believe that waters would be delivered to them either this summer or the summer to come, would find themselves upon arid land with no water, with no hope of water, and they would be in just as serious a condition as those who are now the employees of the contractors; and distress would be brought to all of them. Why? Because the Federal Government had failed to keep its own obligations under its own agreements!

In order to avoid that kind of a situation the Senator from Utah brought the bill here, and to further the purpose I have offered it as an amendment to the substitute proposal of the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether the bill to which he has referred has been reported by the committee?

Mr. STEIWER. It has. It was reported earlier to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But just to-day?

Mr. STEIWER. To-day. It is not yet on the calendar. It will be on the calendar to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I point out to the Senator that there are a large number of additional methods for approaching the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for funds, including flood control and other processes of reclamation. That is particularly true of drainage areas; and I doubt whether we ought to incorporate this provision in the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. May I ask the Senator a question? Are there other situations in which the United States Government has made contracts and where the circumstances indicate that the Government is going to be obliged to breach its own agreements, as is the case with respect to the contracts executed by the Reclamation Bureau?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know of cases where the Government has actually made contracts and where the funds are not available; but what I can not understand is why the Government should make contracts for the construction of reclamation projects without having the amounts available in the reclamation fund.

Mr. STEIWER. I am told that the Reclamation Bureau limits its contracts to an amount for which the anticipations of last year seemed to afford a basis of perfect safety, and, of course, the contracts are within the appropriations. The curtailment in receipts, partly brought on by the action of the Congress itself in providing for the moratorium of last year, has depleted the special fund, so that the required funds are not available.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course everyone who suggested or advocated the moratorium as to reclamation payments knew that that would be the effect of reducing temporarily the fund available for reclamation projects; and they knew that it would be necessary to go to the Treasury or obtain funds in some indirect way. There are a great many applications here for funds for different purposes that are not comprehended within the provisions of this bill for reclamation projects; and I think we had better give this subject separate treatment, if I may make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. STEIWER. I know of no other application which could come from an agency of the United States and which might be prompted by the action of Congress itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, some time ago I offered an amendment which was not in order. I believe it now is in order, and I should like to have it stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Arizona offers the following amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

After the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], inserted on page 2, line 25, of the so-called Wagner amendment, insert:

Provided, That this act shall be construed to permit the governor of a State to use, under supervision of the State highway department, such loan in the improvement of highways as a part of his work-relief plan.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia permits money borrowed by States from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be expended for supervision and overhead expenses upon the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There has been a tendency in some States for road work to be done by the governors, without utilizing the services and the experience of the State highway departments, thereby building up what amounts to rival road construction organizations. Any road work that is done by a State should be carried on under the supervision of its State highway department. The amendment will also permit money thus borrowed to be expended to supplement Federal aid to highways, which is perfectly proper, particularly since Congress has failed to authorize future Federal aid road appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments which were adopted by the Senate to the amendment offered by me, which amendment has been adopted by the Senate, be incorporated in the amendment I have offered in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I rise to inquire whether or not the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has offered his amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has. It is pending now.

Mr. DICKINSON. I move to strike out all of section 6, beginning on line 15 of page 3, and ending with line 3 of page 5.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the effect of that is simply to strike out the authorization for the expenditure of $15,000,000 to take care of transients.

Mr. LONG. That certainly ought to stay in.

Mr. WAGNER. It has been discussed so much in the Senate already that we all understand the problem, so that I shall not spend any further time upon it. It would be most unfortunate if that provision were stricken from the bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, in my judgment we are simply proceeding here to encourage people to become transients rather than to discourage them. We are setting up here a fund of $15,000,000 to be borrowed by the governors of the various States, and they are going to furnish relief and work relief to unemployed and needy transients and to aid in their rehabilitation in training in work camps, which means, if you please, that we are going to be establishing work camps all over the United States with the purpose of taking care of this type of transients.

I know of nothing that will be as much of a contributing factor to the hobo class in this country as this type of provision. We have already taken care of numerous boys under the Couzens amendment to the Army bill. Now we are seeking to extend that, if you please, to the point of inviting the people of various sections to become transients, and saying, "If you will move from this State to another State, there they are putting in work camps and rehabilitation camps; and all you have to do is to go there and make application, and you will then be a transient, and will be cared for by the Government at Government expense."

To me this is a provision that is headed exactly in the wrong direction. On the other hand, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has a request from a governor of a State to assist in caring for their poor, that can be done. The transient, when he comes in for a meal of victuals, is not asked whether he is a resident of New York or not; but here we say to him, "Become a transient, and we are going to set up training camps for you. We are going to set up rehabilitation camps for you."

Mr. WAGNER and Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the evidence adduced in a survey recently made shows that there are over a million and a quarter of men, women, and children wandering around this country homeless, looking for an economic opportunity which in most communities is foreclosed. Most of these people have left their homes because there was no possibility of employment in their own localities. They can not get any work in their States of residence, and therefore they wander to some other section in the hope of securing employment. When they reach their destination they find local restrictive legislation which provides that one must be a resident of that particular locality for a year or two years before one is entitled to any relief or employment. Thus the wanderer is hopeless again; and unless some generous person gives him something to eat, or gives him shelter, he is absolutely abandoned.

It is to take care of that type of case that this provision is made. We are not inviting anybody to go anywhere. These people are all over the country now, a million and a quarter of them. They would not be migrating except that there is no chance for them to work at the places where they formerly lived. By the bill before us we are dealing with this problem, I think, much more intelligently than by the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] because, while it is true that his amendment helps to arrest the process of mental and moral deterioration by putting the young people into a wholesome atmosphere and giving them exercise, there is no provision for training them or providing employment for them.

That is why I think this method of dealing with the subject, for which I am indebted to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], who was the one who proposed the remedy first, is the best way of approaching it. We permit the States to deal with it, to provide camps or other methods of rehabilitating these people, so as to give them employment, and care for their physical needs. I think it would be very unfortunate if this provision were eliminated from the bill and these unfortunate people were left wandering without aid.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, the author of the amendment himself implies that they are going to do exactly the thing I contend they will do. If a man and his family, residents of the State of Illinois, find that they are out of work, and the Governor of the State of Ohio has set up one of these rehabilitation camps, all they have to do is to put their furniture in the old Ford and drive over to the State of Ohio and go into that camp. Instead of keeping the people where they have their residence, where they should stay—because, dear knows, they can always get along better in the localities where they have friends and acquaintances than in a strange locality—it will lead them to wander over the country, and that is the thing we do not want them to do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This provision is not intended for the benefit of people who have a residence. It is intended for those who have no residence, people who are wanderers, who are moving about from one community to another, and who are kept moving by reason of the fact that there is no provision in the locality where they happen to be quartered. In other words, the States limit their relief out of the funds that are obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to their own citizens, or residents of the State, and a person who happens to be in Iowa who is not a citizen of the State of Iowa or not a resident of the State, and not, therefore, entitled to relief or assistance under the State administration, has to move on to another State and receive assistance there for two or three days, and continue the movement. The object of this provision, as I understand it, is to avoid that necessity.

Mr. DICKINSON. As a matter of fact, there is not a large number of people in the United States who have no set place of residence.

Mr. JOHNSON. O Mr. President!

Mr. DICKINSON. If there is a transient group, we ought to insist that they get a place of residence.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the Senator from Iowa had better check up on that statement before he makes it again.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. As to boys, the testimony shows that more than a quarter of a million of them are wandering around the country to-day. The testimony shows, as to those who are not boys, that there are more than a million and a quarter wandering around this country to-day.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator does not meet my reply. The fact is that most of those people have residences in some State, and if they are told to go home to the place where they have a residence they can go home.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment more?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Tell them to go home! Let us think of that for a moment. Across the line into California during a considerable period of time there came 1,200 per day of homeless people. Our State undertook to establish camps for the relief of those people. Those camps, of course, could take care of only a small portion of those needing aid, and they have taken care of about 5,000 in State-organized and State-supervised camps, where it was sought to relieve distress.

I beg pardon for interfering with the Senator's time. If he will pardon me, I want to continue for an instant. Or would he wish me to conclude?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am glad to extend the Senator's time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me say to the Senator this as well: It is not a question of saying to these people, who thus come across the line, "You go home." For the love of God, where will they go? They are there because they have not anything, because they have traveled and traveled and traveled in the hope that they might accomplish something, or that they might get work. We can not turn them around, in a little, broken-down old car, in which they have come, or when they have tramped across the line of our State, and say to them, "Go back to Iowa"—and many of them have come from the State of Iowa. They have nothing in Iowa, and they have nothing in California except the relief which the State and the relief societies may have given them.

The other day, through an amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], we undertook to take care of a maximum, if they are taken into the Army camps, of 88,000 boys. If there remain in this country a couple of hundred thousand youths who have no place to go, who are transients, it seems to me that every element, not only of pity and mercy but every element that exists in a human constitution, ought to lead us to take care of those who thus require it.

I submit to the Senator that, if he will look at the testimony that has been taken in this matter before the various committees, he will see not only the fact that this is desirable, but he will see that it is absolutely essential if we are to deal with humanity at all by legislation.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I am familiar with the type of family who put their belongings in the Ford and start from one State to another. We have charitable organizations in every State, and I know those people are cared for in many instances by charitable organizations. It is not a question of taking care of them for a day or two, or anything of that kind, but here it is said we are to establish rehabilitation camps, and are to have work camps, and are to build up an organization that is to be utilized by this type of inhabitants.

The theory that these people have no established residence in any State is in my judgment wrong. Most of them have a home somewhere. They have come from somewhere, and they have come probably thinking they are going to better their condition, and the quicker we discourage that type of transient in the United States, the better we will be off.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, with due respect for the conclusions of the Senator from Iowa, I do not agree with him. Without intending to use offensive language, to say to a man in these days "Go home," is equivalent to telling him to go to Hades. Many of those for whom this provision is sought to be made have no homes. Their homes were shattered before they started out upon the road.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the Wagner substitute. Consider the conditions: The head of the house lost his job, his position, the home was mortgaged, and the mortgage was foreclosed. The elder son, probably all the sons, left school, and the daughters likewise, hoping to secure work to aid the parents. Weary, embarrassed, and out of sheer self-respect, they left their native village, their native county or State, to go forth as our fathers did in other but happier days, to try to carve from the granite face of fate a livelihood for themselves and for those left at home.

Unable to secure employment, they have for months tramped the highways and the streets, and many men with antecedents just as worthy as the antecedents of any Senator here have been reduced to a position where they have almost lost their own self-respect.

For them it is no longer a matter of securing a "job," no longer a matter of securing a position; it is a matter of securing clothing; it is a matter of securing sufficient food to enable them to continue an animal existence.

There has come with this calamitous depression, and naturally comes, a loss of ideals, an evaporation of hope, far more baleful and tragic than the mere loss of money, or even the loss of the home.

They have no home to which they may go. The distress at the home village would only be emphasized and increased if they went "home." They would, forsooth, go back in rags, hungry, in many instances covered with vermin, and be obliged to confess to their already stricken relatives and friends at "home" that they have not been able to earn a dollar during their long wanderings to send back to the old home.

Mr. President, only the most desperate emergency would call for legislation of this sort, but a desperate emergency is upon us. It is worse than war. In war time the national banner floats bravely in the sky, the speeches of the orators encourage and stimulate men and women, and the heroic voice of silver bugles calls them forth. But in circumstances such as those now upon us, men must take courage only from the reservoirs of their own souls. Men receive no encouragement from the orators or from the bugles. There is no romance, no glamour; all is drab, dull, and hopeless. Each man thus tramping has a body of death chained to himself. Each man has a sad soul, and his heart is an aching, lumpish thing. Each man thus wandering almost wishes he could separate himself from an existence here if this condition is to be continued.

Therefore I say, Mr. President, it is an emergency greater than war; it is a distress more poignant than any war; and I support the provision now pending. With due deference, I oppose the amendment of my learned friend from Iowa; but I ask the Senator from New York, whose benevolence and whose ability shine throughout this country and whose leadership will be followed and ought to be followed, in my judgment, to accept an amendment by which I propose, on page 3, line 22, after the word "transients" to insert the words "who are American citizens."

Mr. President, my reason for offering this amendment is: We of the Southwest have an international line of nearly 2,000 miles. Aliens in vast numbers are bootlegged across that line, and it is more than our respective States may do to feed and care for our own people. But, whether or not my amendment shall be adopted, I shall support the provision offered by the Senator from New York, and it would be helpful if the amendment I have offered could be added so that this sort of relief shall be furnished only to American citizens. I ask that my amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment may not be offered at this time, since there is an amendment pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. CUTTING obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just about two minutes?

Mr. CUTTING. We will have until only 4.30 o'clock, and I know there are a number of other Senators who want to speak on the pending amendment and on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico declines to yield.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has spoken of charitable organizations. It is quite obvious that the Senator has not read the hearings on the measure originally introduced by me, which has been incorporated in the La Follette-Costigan bill. I may say that a similar measure is contained in the Wagner substitute.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. While the Senator was out of the Chamber, in my short observation on the amendment I have offered I told of my indebtedness to the Senator from New Mexico for this particular provision of the measure.

Mr. CUTTING. I thank the Senator.

What I particularly want to bring to the attention of the Senate is that in most cases local charitable organizations and municipal and State charity organizations have a regulation throughout the country that they can not take care of any except the citizens of the State. The transients are either not being taken care of at all or they are being given one night's lodging and sent on their way. A very interesting questionnaire was sent out to the mayors of many of the cities of the country. I am going to ask that the answers of the mayors may be incorporated at the end of my remarks, because I think they answer very briefly and pointedly the complaint of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. Does the Senator realize that every mayor would like to get the responsibility of taking care of the people who happen to be within the borders of his city transferred to the Federal Government rather than to have the responsibility rest on his own city?

Mr. CUTTING. The questionnaire was an entirely different one from what the Senator implies. The mayors were not asked whether or not they wanted any aid from the Federal Government. What they were asked was: "What are you doing to take care of transients?" Let me read a few answers from the mayors of some towns in the Senator's own State:

Oskaloosa: Sleep at police station; work on woodpile.
Cherokee: Do nothing.
Mason City: Fed and lodged overnight only.
Bettendorf: One meal and flop and on your way.
Nevada: Feed in return for work on woodpile.
Independence: Free lodging only.
Cresco: One meal and one night's lodging.
Ottumwa: Referred to soup kitchen for a meal and then on their way elsewhere.
Glenwood: Lodging and breakfast once only.

I am not singling out the State of Iowa because it is particularly negligent in the handling of this problem. Every State in the United States has a record of the same kind, from East to West. These young men and aging men and young women are given one night's lodging perhaps—perhaps that is the best that can be given—and then they are sent on to the next community to be taken care of.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am very familiar with the towns mentioned by the Senator, every one of them. I do not believe in a single instance they have asked anything from the State or the Government or any one else. They have taken care of their own relief. Naturally they are going to pass on all of these people they can. They will send them on to New Mexico if we organize a rehabilitation camp down there, or to New York, or wherever we organize one. Perhaps we can spare some more out there. All the Senator is proposing to do with this $15,000,000 is to encourage a lot more people to become gypsy travelers in the United States.

Mr. CUTTING. Our responsibility is greater than that, may I say to the Senator from Iowa. If Iowa will not attend to them and no other State will attend to them, and municipalities all over the country are shirking their responsibility in this respect, is it not the duty of the Federal Government to take care of its own, to take care of the responsibility which is a national responsibility, just as this whole relief responsibility is a national one and not a private or State or municipal responsibility?

The conditions which exist in the country—and I am not speaking merely of the transient problem, but of the whole relief problem—are national in their scope. That seems to me the main principle involved in the vote which will be taken in a moment on the substitute of the Senator from New York. It is the responsibility of the National Government to see that its citizens do not starve. That is the only question involved in the vote we are going to take this afternoon.

We have heard learned discussions as to relative responsibilities of the States, the municipalities, and the Federal Government. What are those responsibilities? Mr. President, the Government is not a set of rulers to decide in their wisdom just what responsibility they have to the people over whom they rule. Our Government is the citizenship of the Nation organized for public purposes. The duty that the Government owes to its citizens is the duty that society owes to its members.

Can there be any obligation of society toward its members as sacred or as fundamental as the duty of keeping them alive?

We talk about self-liquidating projects. We talk about profits. We talk about loans and rates of interest. Society does not owe its members the primary duty of seeing that they make a profit by loaning money through channels of investment or in any other way. That may or may not be desirable as a secondary goal. Most religions have declared it usury. But whether it be desirable or not, it is not primary. The primary right, I submit, is the right to be safe from starvation. Personally I should add the right to maintain a decent standard of living, and in that respect my only criticism of the pending measure is that I think the funds provided are inadequate. But, regardless of that, the principle contained in the measure is sound.

The theory of the amendment is that the minor groups of citizens, the States, and municipalities, should assume the primary responsibility and that the large organization, the Federal Government, should loan money and make a profit out of the loan. I think that theory is at variance with the facts as they exist in the country. I do not believe these loans will ever be repaid. But whether that is so or whether it is not so, I think the substitute is founded on a false theory. I think it is contrary to sound policies of public welfare.

If ever there was a duty toward any body of our citizenship, it is the duty involved in the provisions of this act which the Senator from Iowa is now attempting to strike from the bill. Here we have perhaps a million, perhaps more—it is impossible to get adequate figures, but some have estimated it as high as five million—but let us say a million of the youth of this country traveling about the United States trying to get jobs, homeless, being unable to get any relief from local communities, from local charities, from municipalities, or from States. What are we going to do with them? Ten per cent of them it is estimated come from the so-called hobo class. The remaining 90 per cent are the most ambitious, the most intelligent, the most courageous of our young men.

I submit, Mr. President, that there is no section of the bill which is more necessary and more important than this section, and I trust that the Senate will not allow the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to prevail.

EXHIBIT A

DIGEST OF LETTERS RECEIVED FROM MAYORS

The following excerpts, arranged by States, showing local methods of dealing with the transient problem, are taken from letters received in response to a questionnaire sent to the mayors of all cities and towns in the United States, requesting information concerning local unemployment-relief problems. The summary given here is based upon replies to the question, "How are you meeting the problem of the transient unemployed in need of relief?"

"ALABAMA

"Piedmont (3,668): Pass them on—occasionally give meals to worthy cases.
"Dothan (16,046): Through the Salvation Army.
"Ozark (3,103): One meal and one night's lodging.
"Florala (2,580): Unable financially to handle.
"Jasper (5,313): Small portion of food and send on.
"Andalusia (5,154): Have none.
"Prichard (4,580): Not meeting the problem at all.
"Selma (18,012): One night's lodging, two meals, and insist they move on. Handled very inadequately.
"Opp (2,918): Usually feed and transport to next city.
"Gadsden (24,042): Through Salvation Army.
"Union Springs (2,875): Give temporary relief on work basis, except with women when direct relief is given.
"Atmore (3,035): Temporary relief while present.
"Nine of these cities have an increase in their own unemployment problem over last year of from 75 to over 200 per cent. Three report no city appropriation at all to meet the problem.

"ARIZONA

"Nogales (6,006): Emergency relief only.
"Bisbee (8,023): No serious problem, but recently increasing.
"Nogales has an increase of over 100 per cent in unemployment over last year with only a 40 per cent increase in appropriation. Bisbee has no legal city appropriation for the care of their own unemployed.

"ARKANSAS

"Searcy (3,387): Met through Good Fellows fund.
"Hope (6,008): Unable to meet the problem.
"Texarkana (10,764): Only feeding them.
"Dermott (2,942): Met with State funds.
"Paragould (5,966): A meal and, if ill, possibly transportation home.
"Stamps (2,705): With local funds.
"McGehee (3,488): Sleep in city jail and city hall; get them out of town as soon as possible.
"Pine Bluff (20,760): Put them to work and make use of flop house.
"Wynne (3,505): Small amounts from community chest.
"Crossett (2,811): Have few.
"Mena (3,118): Very few helped.
"Forrest City (4,594): Trying to pass up, as we have no funds.
"Helena (8,316): Fairly well.
"Arkadelphia (3,380): Pushing them on.

"El Dorado (16,421): Trying to care for them through the Salvation Army.

"De Queen (2,938): Impossible to care for; it is our hardest problem.

"Van Buren (5,182): Not taking care of them.

"Brinkley (3,046): Through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

"Fort Smith (31,429): By the Salvation Army.

"Some of these cities show an increase in unemployment over 1931 up to 600 per cent. Several state that their appropriation for care of the unemployed has been cut off due to delinquent taxes. A number have no appropriation for their own unemployed. One, Dermott, states that 90 per cent of the city will need help this winter.

"CALIFORNIA

"Maywood (6,794): No relief; can't take care of our citizens.

"Long Beach (142,032): Single males slept and fed three days. Families given emergency relief and returned to original residence.

"Los Gatos (3,168): Two meals; overnight lodging.

"Piedmont (9,333): Have none.

"San Mateo (13,444): City gives three meals and bed; repairs shoes, clothes, etc.

"Auburn (2,661): Temporary relief only.

"Red Bluff (3,517): Small amount of food and gasoline.

"Needles (3,144): City can not handle them.

"Porterville (5,303): Don't have to meet the problem.

"Lompoc (2,845): Give necessary meal.

"Fresno (52,513): Night's lodging and two meals in return for four hours' work.

"Tulare (6,207): Street cleaning and municipal wood-yard work at 25 cents per hour, which is paid in groceries.

"Roseville (6,425): Send them on, as have no place to house them.

"Coronado (5,425): State work camps.

"Burlingame (13,270): The cities of Burlingame, San Mateo, and Hillsborough, with a combined population of 32,000, all within a radius of 2½ miles. Jointly we have prepared a shelter with a service capacity of about 60. Our service consists of lodging in clean bunks and wholesome food. We require each man to take a bath and have all clothing fumigated; we also have a barber shop and shoe-repairing equipment, both operated by capable itinerants, who are willing to remain for their food and bed; we also have a hospital service, local doctors donating their time, local druggists furnish the drugs gratis, local merchants donate the majority of the food, and local residents cast-off clothing. We allow only overnight service for all, except those who require medical treatment; each man must work at least two hours each day on the wood pile; the accumulating wood is given to the poor. I might say that our plan is working splendidly. Since opening the shelter we do not allow begging and can see a decided falling off in this respect.

"Lynwood (7,323): No provision.

"Gardena (15,969): No assistance given.

"Cohoes (23,000): Transportation from private funds. Emergency relief until residence established.
"Frankfort (4,000): Not meeting the problem.
"Gowanda (3,000): Shelter and breakfast in local jail. (Had 800 in 1932.)
"Canton (2,800): Meal and lodging and they go on.
"Greenport (3,000): If resident of some other State, cooperate with private agencies and make sure he gets sufficient temporary relief till he reaches legal settlement.
"Baldwinsville (3,800): Sending back to towns from which they came.
"East Syracuse (4,600): Town and county welfare relief.
"Monticello (3,400): Helped by charity.
"Batavia (17,000): Red Cross gives food and Catholic Charities (Inc.) also assist.
"Massena (10,000): Lodging at police station.
"Fredonia (5,800): Free lodging and meals contributed by private and public relief.
"Rochester (328,000): A county problem. Usually send them back to place of settlement.
"Granville (3,400): Food and shelter in jail. Veterans cared for by American Legion.
"Potsdam (4,000): Housing and night's lodging.
"Seneca Falls (6,000): Have no means for handling.
"Amsterdam (38,000): Give them night's lodging and couple of meals. If more required refer them to county commissioner of public welfare.
"Haverstraw (2,800): Helped when asked.
"Olean (21,000): Lodge at police station. Eat at Salvation Army.
"Watervliet (16,000): Billed to home community.
"Irvington (3,000): Free lodging and breakfast at police quarters.
"Dunkirk (17,000): They are taken care of among the people. Are taken care of.
"Hamburg (4,700): One night's lodging, meals, and instructions to move on.
"Kingston (28,000): Private agencies and police department.
"Lynbrook (13,000): No relief given.
"Garden City (7,000): On village improvements.
"Mechanicville (7,900): Give lodging.
"Wellsville (5,600): Through Salvation Army.
"Tonawanda (12,000): Emergency relief until they can be sent back to legal residence.
"Ogdensburg (16,900): Taking care of and charging back to place of residence.
"Johnstown (10,800): By Salvation Army and police department charged back to welfare department.
"Fulton (12,000): Sheltered overnight and fed.
"Lackawanna (23,000): Through police and Father Baker's institution.
"Dunkirk (17,800): Through private agencies.
"The increase in unemployment over 1931 is large in New York. The appropriations for unemployment in many cases are much smaller than the reported increase in unemployment. In some cases this appropriation shows a decrease. The percentage contributed by private agencies is on the whole small.

"NORTH CAROLINA

"Charlotte (82,000): Work on woodpile. Have adequate shelter, etc.
"Burlington (9,700): We ask them to go home.
"Lexington (9,600): Room and meals.

"Morehead City (3,400): No definite program.
"Rockingham (2,900): Can not meet the problem.
"Raleigh (37,000): Relief committee supplements budget for this.
"Rocky Mount (21,000): Through the Salvation Army.
"Goldsboro (14,900): Through the Salvation Army.
"In North Carolina it is noticeable that the appropriation for unemployment relief does not keep pace with the increase in unemployment. For instance Salisbury reports a 100 per cent in unemployment and no increase in appropriation. Rockingham an increase of 200 per cent in unemployment and no increase in appropriations and the private agencies, help has increased only 20 per cent.

"NORTH DAKOTA

"Williston (5,000): Allowed to eat at community kitchen.
"Bismarck (11,000): Community kitchen.
"Valley City (5,000): Give them a meal and send them on.
"Williston shows a 100 per cent increase in unemployment over 1931 with a 33⅓ per cent increase in appropriation for unemployed and no private agencies helping and an inability to issue more bonds.

"Cleveland (900,000): Being met by Wayfarers Lodge, which is operated by Associated Charities. It is supported in part by the community fund, part by the city of Cleveland, and part by county of Cuyahoga, with the assistance of State funds (in 1932).
"The proportion of increase for 1932 as compared with the unemployment problem in 1931 is very great in Ohio. In few of the cities does it go below 50 per cent above the 1931 figure, running round 100 per cent and over in almost all the cities reporting. The appropriation for unemployment has not increased in the same proportion. We find a city with 160 per cent increase in unemployment and only 100 per cent increase in appropriation; another with 200 per cent increase in unemployment and 100 per cent increase in appropriation; another with 95 per cent increase in unemployment and 45 per cent increase in appropriation. Out of 47 cities only 2 reported a weekly allowance to a family of over $5—most of them running between $2.50 and $4. In a number of cases funds of private agencies have decreased.

"Springdale (4,700): House men in lockup and give local relief where necessary.
"Pittsburgh (669,800): During past year the homeless-men problem has become acute, and in December, 1932, approximately 6,000 homeless men were given assistance. We estimate that about 3,000 of these men are residents of Allegheny County and 3,000 transients. Transient unemployed cared for by a number of agencies using funds from various sources. Just recently have arranged with the State emergency relief board to provide food for free meals served by certain of these agencies. (For bulletin concerning service to homeless persons, write Bureau of Social Research, Federation of Social Agencies of Pittsburgh and Allegheny County, 711 Wabash Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., vol. 1, No. 2, November–December, 1932.)
"Pottstown (19,400): Lodging and breakfast.
"Hellertown (3,800): Through welfare association.
"Windler (9,000): Feed and a place to sleep.
"East McKeesport (3,000): Can not care for local relief properly.

"WYOMING

"Cheyenne (17,300): Through the Salvation Army."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the provision which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] seeks to have taken out of the so-called Wagner substitute was thoroughly debated a week ago to-day and a week ago last Saturday. The Senator from Iowa has disclosed his attitude toward all relief of the unemployed youth and others, particularly single men. The Senator from Iowa was chairman of the subcommittee on Military Affairs, which held no hearings, and reported out, in cooperation with his colleagues, the amendment to the War Department appropriation bill providing for the care of 88,000 boys in military camps. They reported it adversely and unanimously. The Senate demonstrated last Monday its disposition and desire to take care of those boys. If the Senate is of the same mind that it was then, it should ignore the motion of the Senator from Iowa. The Senator from Iowa does not care what becomes of these youths or the unemployed.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator is not justified in any such conclusion as that. As a matter of fact we have gotten along for one hundred-odd years in this Government without having to establish rehabilitation or work camps such as the Senator proposes. I do not know how many of them the Senator expects to establish in the United States. If there are a million of these men, the Senator would have the munificent sum of $15 a piece to spend on them in these camps. As a matter of fact, it is simply the beginning of a program which, in my judgment, will finally result in taxation that can not possibly be maintained for the benefit of this type of people.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator is of just that stand-pat type, as I have told him personally. I am saying nothing now that I have not said to his face in private conversation. He is one of the men who never want to do anything new. He wants to stand pat on everything, rely upon history and precedent, and no emergency can arise anywhere in the United States, humane or otherwise, which will budge the mind of the Senator from Iowa. His mind is eternally fixed, as solid as the Rock of Gibraltar, and no heart beat can change his position. In many respects I am as hard-boiled as he is, but, Mr. President, I refuse to be controlled by his yardstick. I refuse to be guided by his heartbeats, for I do not know whether he has any or not. But I do know that he has a lack of consideration and sympathy for the 88,000 boys for whom we provided care in military camps. As chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, he opposed that proposal and put it over unanimously in the committee.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly.

Mr. CUTTING. May I point out to the Senator for the benefit of the Senator from Iowa that the provisions in the bill make no mention of camps? They leave each State to select its own methods for dealing with the situation. It might be through camps; it might be through some other method; but the primary need which is to be taken care of by the States is, when possible, to send these transients home.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that line 23, page 3, reads as follows:

> And to aid in their rehabilitation in training and work camps.

I do not know how the English language could be any plainer than that.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to point out that that provision is discretionary.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I just wanted to make that very statement; that the word "camps" does not appear in the Costigan-La Follette bill. I included that merely as a suggestion to the States; but each State, in dealing with this problem, is at liberty to adopt any plan or any policy it may see fit, and is in no way limited by this legislation.

Mr. CUTTING. In other words, it is not a compulsory feature of the Senator's bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Not at all; it is merely a suggestion, which I incorporated in the bill in view of the proposal some days ago of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS].

Mr. CUTTING. It was not included in my provision. I notice that the provision in the substitute of the Senator from New York reads:

> In training and work camps or otherwise.

So that is in no way a compulsory feature of the bill; it is simply left to the States to carry out their own policy, subject to the approval of the Federal board.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, in the debate we had last Monday, in particular, and on the previous Saturday, it was pointed out that there are at least a million and a quarter homeless single men alone, and the proposal I made was to take care of those from 17 to 25 years of age. It was afterwards amended in the Senate to provide for those not under 15 or over 21, which leaves unprovided for almost a million single men over 21 years of age, graduates of high schools and colleges, young men who have never had a job during the nearly four years of depression. For three years the colleges and schools have been graduating young men who have never had an opportunity for employment, who have never had an opportunity to earn a dollar. During the discussion a week ago the very excellent care that was being taken of some three or four thousand young men in the camps of California was pointed out. This money can be used to aid and augment that sort of activity. Every forester knows the opportunities in the forests of the United States to set up camps where healthy and desirable work can be afforded.

Mr. President, in view of what was said a week ago, I do not care to debate the matter any longer, but I do hope the Senate will not approve of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRAMMER obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Arizona wishes to perfect the text of the proposal?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I wish to have a vote on my amendment before the vote finally comes on the motion to strike out. In other words—and I ask the Chair for advice—have I not the right to perfect it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Inasmuch as the text must be perfected before it can be otherwise dealt with, the Chair will see to it that that vote is taken on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Chair.

Mr. GRAMMER. Mr. President, I rise at this time, while this important measure is pending, with great sympathy in my heart not only for the unemployed man who is seeking and would like to secure honest employment in his vicinity but also for the man who is employed, if you please, but finds his burden heavy. When we perform an act as individuals or as a legislative body, if we wish to maintain our standing among our friends and in our respective communities, indeed, if we wish to main the standing of the Nation, we must ponder well the result of any action we may contemplate taking.

Mr. President, what will be the result in case a very large appropriation, for the purposes designed by the pending measure, shall be made by the Congress at this time? I wish to be conservative in the figures I shall give, and I shall deal in round figures. I believe that the records show that the United States Government now owes in excess of $20,000,000,000, upon which an average of 3 per cent interest is being paid. I understand that within the last 12 years the national debt of our country has been reduced by some $3,000,000,000. It is easy to see that if the reduction in our national debt shall continue at the same rate, namely, $250,000,000 a year, it will require 80 years to pay the obligations which the Government now owes and should pay.

Applying the same calculation to the $600,000,000 involved in the pending bill and computing the interest which we must pay at 3 per cent—simple, annual interest, if you please—it amounts to $18,000,000 a year; so that in 80 years the interest alone will aggregate $1,440,000,000. Thus, the appropriation of $600,000,000, which we are about to make, will by that time have cost the people of the United States $2,040,000,000.

If it shall cost 5 per cent to administer this $600,000,000 fund, there will be left $570,000,000 to be applied to relief, which, as I understand, is to be devoted largely to public works and similar activities.

So, Mr. President, by a very short process of division, we find that in order at this time to get the use of $570,000,000, before that sum shall actually be repaid it will cost, as I have already said, $2,040,000,000, and the actual present benefit to be derived from that vast expenditure will be but 28 per cent of the cost. Can we afford to indulge in such extravagance? Do we want to build roads or overhead crossings or tunnels or canals or any other imaginable project in the United States at this time, Mr. President, at an expense of 100 per cent when we can only receive 28 per cent in value? Can we afford to do that? May we do it?

Mr. President, if 2 decades be a generation, 80 years constitute 4 generations, and, according to the figures which I have given, we are starting now on the fifth generation of indebtedness. Our great-great-great-grandchildren are the ones who are to repay this $600,000,000. Are we so cowardly as men that we are willing to mortgage the blood and the happiness of a generation five times removed from us in order to do something at this time for which we only get 28 cents on the dollar? If we should do such a thing, our posterity in their day and generation should rise up to shame the day in which we lived.

Mr. President, these may be broad statements, and they may not coincide exactly with the ideas of other Senators, but I see no other result. It seems to me that the Congress has simply gone wild; it has indulged in an orgy of appropriations for the past 25 years. Vast sums of money have been appropriated for many things. Have we received even 28 per cent for much of the money that has been appropriated by the Congress?

I want, Mr. President, to leave with the Senate this further thought: This Nation is divided into some 48 States; these States themselves have some obligations to perform through their governors and treasuries, if you please. Have they lined themselves up and said to the Congress of the United States, "We are helpless; we have used every possible resource"? And have they proven it by showing that they can not sell their bonds, that their resources are absolutely exhausted, and that it is up to Congress to supply them with money with which to feed the unemployed and take care of those who are in distress? I think, sir, that quite the opposite is the fact. It seems to me that the Congress is trying to force upon the States money with which to feed and care for their people. No doubt many people need to be taken care of, but, in my estimation, as I see it, if I were the governor of a State—which I never was and never expect to be—I think that I should make sure that the people of my State would certainly have the benefit of their own resources before I would appeal to Congress to appropriate money supplied by the taxpayers of the Nation.

Mr. President, if I may have a moment more, why do I say that? It costs money to collect the taxes and put them into the Treasury of the United States and then disburse them again. The very best thing we can do to help the taxpayer and the mortgagor and those in distress is not to collect more taxes but to leave the money in the hands of the individual who gets a hundred per cent benefit of it instead of a 28 per cent benefit, as would be the result, according to the figures I have given, of the appropriation now contemplated.

Mr. President, perhaps I should apologize for what I have said. I have only been a Member of the Senate for a short time, and my term will expire within the next two weeks. I simply have spoken to the Senate as a plain business man, giving, in a very rough way, my idea of the situation confronting us. I have not done so in a picturesque manner, but at this time we are really not considering or thinking about a beautiful picture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4.30 o'clock having arrived, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3 of the substitute amendment, line 22, after the word "transients," it is proposed to insert the words "who are American citizens," so that, if amended, it will read:

SEC. 2 (a). The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to make available out of funds of the corporation the sum of $15,000,000, under the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, to the several States and Territories, to be used in furnishing relief and work relief to unemployed and needy transients who are American citizens—

And so forth.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is closed.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum before the vote is taken. I rose for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ashurst | Byrnes | Dickinson | Hull |
| Austin | Capper | Dill | Johnson |
| Bailey | Caraway | Fess | Kean |
| Bankhead | Carey | Fletcher | Kendrick |
| Barbour | Clark | Frazier | King |
| Barkley | Connally | George | La Follette |
| Bingham | Coolidge | Glass | Logan |
| Black | Copeland | Goldsborough | Long |
| Borah | Costigan | Gore | McGill |
| Bratton | Couzens | Grammer | McKellar |
| Brookhart | Cutting | Harrison | McNary |
| Bulkley | Dale | Hayden | Metcalf |
| Bulow | Davis | Howell | Moses |
| Neely | Robinson, Ark. | Smoot | Tydings |
| Norris | Robinson, Ind. | Steiwer | Vandenberg |
| Nye | Russell | Stephens | Wagner |
| Oddie | Schuyler | Swanson | Walcott |
| Patterson | Sheppard | Thomas, Idaho | Walsh, Mass. |
| Pittman | Shipstead | Thomas, Okla. | Walsh, Mont. |
| Reed | Shortridge | Townsend | White |
| Reynolds | Smith | Trammell | |

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] is unavoidably absent because of illness in his family.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is necessarily absent from the Chamber and from the city because of a death in his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is necessarily detained on official business, and that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk restated the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH. May the amendment be stated before the vote is taken?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated again.

The legislative clerk restated the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A demand is made for the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to say one word upon the amendment of the Senator from Arizona to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, under the provisions of the bill which I have offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute, each State has a right——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to object; but if the Senator from New York is going to have a minute, then I want a minute.

Mr. MOSES. I will settle the matter, Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULOW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], and withhold my vote.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McGILL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Making the same announcement as before concerning the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BLAINE], I wish to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who is likewise absent. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted?

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I deside to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are detained on official business, and that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—21

So Mr. ASHURST'S amendment to the amendment of Mr. WAGNER, in the nature of a substitute, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] to the amendment, which will be reported.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Iowa proposes to strike out all of section 6, lines 15 to 25, inclusive, on page 3, all of page 4, and lines 1 to 3 on page 5.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A parliamentary inquiry. Are amendments in order, the time having passed when debate is permitted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that amendments are in order, but that no debate is in order. The Senator from Utah will submit his amendment.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out lines 11 and 12, page 6, of the amended substitute. I do not know how else to describe it. The language to be stricken out is as follows:

Subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is further amended by striking out "(other than by taxation)."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COUZENS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the RECORD show that all the amendments that were made to the so-called Wagner substitute are now in the substitute upon which we are asked to vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the RECORD does so show.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the committee, as amended, together with the substitute, as amended, be printed in the RECORD preceding the roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Costigan-La Follette substitute for Senate bill 5125, as amended, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to cooperate more effectively with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in furnishing relief to their needy and distressed people and in relieving the hardship resulting from unemployment.

SEC. 2. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make available out of the funds of the corporation not to exceed $500,000,000 for payments to the States for emergency relief expenditures and for other expenditures authorized under the provisions of this act, upon certification by the Federal emergency relief board created by section 3.

(b) To enable the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to obtain funds for the purposes of this act, the amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time is increased by $500,000,000.

(c) Ten days after the date upon which a majority of the members of the Federal emergency relief board have qualified and have taken office, no application for funds shall be approved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the provisions of Title I of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, and the Federal emergency relief board shall have access to all files and records of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation relating to the administration of emergency relief under Title I of such act.

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created a Federal emergency relief board (referred to in this act as the "board"), which shall consist of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two of whom shall be experienced in public welfare and relief administration. The board shall have full power of apportionment and allotment of funds under the provisions of this act. The President shall designate one of the members of the board as its chairman. The members of the board shall receive no compensation for their services, except that they shall be paid a per diem compensation of $25 for time devoted to the work of the board, and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government. The board shall cease to exist upon the expiration of two years after the date of the enactment of this act.

(b) The board—

(1) Shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to execute the functions vested in it by this act; and

(2) Shall print monthly for public distribution and shall submit to the President and to the Senate and the House of Representatives (or to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, if those bodies are not in session) a report of its activities and expenditures. Such reports shall, when submitted, be printed as public documents.

(c) The board may appoint and fix the compensation of an executive officer and such experts and, subject to the provisions of the civil service laws, appoint, and, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act; and may make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere and for printing and binding), not to exceed $350,000, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. All expenses of the board shall be paid out of the amount made available for that purpose by section 4 (b).

(d) The board may appoint advisory committees to advise and confer with it with respect to the administration of this act. No salary shall be paid to committee members, but when attending meetings of the board they shall be allowed necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government.

SEC. 4. (a) Forty per cent of the amount made available under section 2 (a) of this act shall be apportioned among the States on the basis of population according to the Fifteenth Decennial Census. Payments made in any year out of the amount apportioned to any State on the basis of population shall not be in excess of two-thirds of the amounts appropriated or otherwise made available for such year by the State (or, in the case of the District of Columbia, appropriated by the Congress for use therein), by the civil subdivisions thereof and/or by private contributions from within the State for emergency relief as defined in section 11 of this act.

(b) The balance of the amount made available under section 2 (a) of this act shall be set aside as a reserve fund for emergency allotments as provided in section 8; except that not to exceed $350,000 of such balance may be used for administrative expenses of the board under this act which shall be paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation upon presentation of vouchers approved by the Federal emergency relief board.

(c) The amounts apportioned or allotted to any State under this act shall be available for payment to and expenditure by such State, for the purposes of this act, until the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act; except that at the expiration of the fiscal year 1933, if the amount certified prior to the expiration of such year for payment to any State out of amounts apportioned on the basis of population under this act is less than one-half of the total amount apportioned to that State on the basis of population, the difference between the amount so certified and one-half of the total amount apportioned shall be added to the reserve fund provided for in subsection (b) of this section and shall be available for allotment to the several States on the basis of need.

SEC. 5. (a) In order to obtain payments out of the amount made available under section 2 (a) of this act a State, through its governor, shall designate or create an agency to cooperate with the board.

(b) Relief shall be administered within each State under rules and regulations adopted by the State agency.

SEC. 6. Any State desiring to obtain funds under this act shall, by the agency designated or created to cooperate with the board, make application therefor from time to time and submit at such times and for such periods as may be prescribed by the board plans for carrying out the provisions of this act within such State. The plans shall include (1) information as to the amounts actually expended for emergency relief by public and private agencies in the State for such periods as the board may prescribe; (2) estimates of the amounts appropriated or otherwise available for emergency relief needs within the State for the period covered by such plan or plans; (3) estimates of amounts necessary to meet the emergency relief needs in the State in the calendar year 1933, and, upon call of the board, in the calendar year 1934; (4) provision for adequate administrative personnel; and (5) provision for securing the benefits contemplated by this act to persons within the State, irrespective of the period of residence within the State. When the board determines that such plans are in conformity with the provisions of this act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes, they shall be approved by the board, and due notice of such approval shall be given to the State agency.

SEC. 7. Within 10 days after the date upon which a majority of the members of the board have qualified and have taken office, the board shall make the apportionment on the basis of population provided in section 4 (a). After application by any State and approval of its plans as provided in section 6 of this act, the board shall immediately certify to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount to be paid to such State.

SEC. 8. (a) Whenever, from an application presented by a State agency and verified by the board, the board finds that the combined moneys available within the State from all sources, supplemented by any moneys to be paid to the State under section 4 (a), will fall below the estimated needs for emergency relief in any State, the State shall be eligible for an emergency allotment on the basis of need from the reserve fund provided in section 4 (b); but no such allotment shall be made to any State unless the board is satisfied that the State or its political subdivisions have made reasonable efforts within their resources to provide for emergency relief expenditures. The board shall, from time to time, certify the amounts to be paid under this subsection.

(b) The board is authorized to allot to the States not to exceed $15,000,000 out of the reserve fund, to be used in furnishing relief and in maintaining work and training programs for persons who have no legal claim on the State or the local community for such assistance.

(c) Any State desiring to receive funds under subsection (b) of this section shall submit to the board through its designated relief agency an application which shall set forth, in the manner prescribed by the board, the extent of the need for service to transients, and a detailed plan for administering relief, and for work and training programs, for transients. In considering such application the board shall determine whether sufficient need has been demonstrated, and whether the plans submitted will, if put into effect, actually relieve distress among transients, assist in their rehabilitation, and tend to decrease the transient problem. If the board finds that need has been demonstrated and approves the plan, it shall certify to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the sum or sums which it approves for payment to the State. For the purpose of this section a transient is a person within the borders of a State who has no legal residence within that State.

SEC. 9. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make payments without delay to the several States in such amounts and at such times as the Federal Emergency Relief Board may certify under sections 7 and 8 of this act, but no payment shall be made pursuant to certificate which has been revoked by the board as provided in section 10.

SEC. 10. Each State agency cooperating with the board under the provisions of this act shall make such reports concerning its operations and expenditures as shall be prescribed or requested by the board. The board may revoke any existing certificate or withhold any further certificate under this act whenever it shall determine, as to any State, that the State agency has not properly expended or supervised the expenditure of moneys paid to it in accordance with the plans approved under this act. Before any such certificate shall be revoked or withheld from any State the board shall give notice in writing to the State agency stating specifically wherein the State has failed to comply with such plans.

SEC. 11. The term "emergency relief," when used in this act, means relief in the form of money or commodities or services furnished by the State or its civil subdivisions or by private contributions from within the State to persons in their abode or habitation, or for the transient and homeless, or in the form of wages or other compensation for work furnished on the basis of need, but not including old-age pensions under special acts, or public aid under special acts to mothers for the care of dependent children, or relief to veterans under special acts. The decision of the board as to the purpose of any expenditure shall be final.

SEC. 12. This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the several States control of the administration of relief under this act within their respective territorial limits, subject only to the provisions and purposes of this act.

SEC. 13. The term "State," as used in this act, shall include the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico; and in the case of the District of Columbia the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall designate the agency to cooperate with the board.

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO EMERGENCY RELIEF AND CONSTRUCTION ACT OF 1932

SEC. 21. Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 201 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 is amended to read as follows:

"(1) to make loans to, or contracts with, States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public corporations, boards and commissions, and public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States, to aid in financing the construction, reconstruction, replacement, extension, or improvement of projects authorized under Federal, State, or municipal law which, in the opinion of the corporation, are needful and in the public interest, such loans or contracts to be made through the purchase of their securities, or otherwise, and for such purpose the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to bid for such securities: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph, from purchasing securities having a maturity of more than 10 years."

SEC. —. Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon a comma and the following:

"and to make loans to finance the construction of housing projects for families of officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, which are self-liquidating in character."

SEC. 22. Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(3) to make loans to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, urban water systems, irrigation systems, and markets (including markets for the purpose of buying, selling, warehousing, or storing of agricultural commodities and livestock) devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character."

"SEC. —. Nothing in subsection (a) of section 201, of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, shall be held to render ineligible to purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures issued by any State or commission or other agency thereof secured by the pledge of receipts from taxes or other impositions upon or derived from the sale of gasoline, the avails of the sale of such debentures to be devoted exclusively to the improvement of the highways of such State."

SEC. 23. Subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is further amended by striking out "(other than by taxation)."

SEC. 24. Subsections (c) and (d) of section 201 of such act are amended to read as follows:

"(c) In order that the surpluses of agricultural commodities and livestock (including products manufactured directly therefrom) may not have a depressing effect upon current prices of such commodities and products, the corporation is authorized and directed to make loans, in such amounts as may in its judgment be necessary, for the purpose of financing sales of such surpluses in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce; but no such sales shall be financed by the corporation if, in its judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such commodities and products: Provided, however, That no such loan shall be made to finance the sale in the markets of foreign countries of cotton owned by the Federal Farm Board or the Cotton Stabilization Corporation.

"(d) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans if adequately secured to bona fide institutions, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for their undertakings, for the purpose of enabling them to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of agricultural commodities and livestock produced in the United States, and the products manufactured directly therefrom."

SEC. 25. Subsection (f) of section 201 of such act is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "but in determining the adequacy of security offered by a borrower applying under subsection (a) of this section the board may, in its discretion, accept as adequate security under this section, a lien on, or other satisfactory assurances of the application of, so much of the revenues from the project as may be required to meet interest payments during the period of the loan and assure refunding within a reasonable period: Provided further, That each loan made under paragraphs (1) to (5) of subsection (a) of this section after this subsection, as amended, takes effect, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 1 per cent more than the rate of interest established for the last issue of bonds of the United States preceding the making of such loan.

SEC. 26. The second proviso of subsection (g) of section 201 of such act is amended by striking out "(1) or (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1), (2), or (5)."

SEC. 27. Subsection (h) of section 201 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(h) The corporation may make loans under this section at any time prior to January 23, 1934: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the corporation from issuing funds to a borrower prior to January 23, 1939, under the terms of any agreement with the borrower made prior to January 23, 1934."

SEC. 28. Section 201 of such act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make available out of the funds of the corporation a sum not exceeding $5,000,000, which may be used by the corporation for the purpose of enabling and assisting established credit insurance organizations in the United States to provide export credit guaranties upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the corporation and such credit insurance organizations."

SEC. 29. Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 301 of such act is amended by striking out "July 1, 1933" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1934."

At the proper place insert the following:

SEC. —. Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to make loans to any fund created by any State for the purpose of insuring the repayment of deposits of public moneys of such State or any of its political subdivisions in banks or depositories qualified under the law of such State to receive such deposits. Such loans may be made at any time prior to January 23, 1934, and upon such terms and conditions as the corporation may prescribe; except that any fund which receives a loan under this paragraph shall be required to assign to the corporation, to the extent of such loan, all amounts which may be received by such fund as dividends or otherwise from the liquidation of any such bank or depository in which deposits of such public moneys were made. As used in this paragraph, the term 'State' includes the several States, and Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, to amend the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, and for other purposes."

The Wagner substitute to Senate bill 5125, as amended and passed, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 1 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 is hereby amended by striking out "$300,000,000" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$600,000,000."

SEC. 2. (a) The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 1 of such act is amended by inserting before the words "Puerto Rico" the words "the District of Columbia."

(b) The last sentence of subsection (b) of section 1 of such act is amended to read as follows: "before any amount is paid under this section to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or to the Governor of Puerto Rico or of the Territory of Alaska, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, or the Territory of Alaska shall enter into an agreement with the corporation for the repayment of such amount with interest thereon as herein provided, in such installments and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon."

SEC. 3. (a) The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 1 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"The governor of any State or Territory may from time to time make application for funds under this section, and in each application so made shall certify the necessity for such funds to supplement the relief resources of the State or Territory, the steps taken by the State or Territory, its political subdivisions, and private agencies, to meet the relief needs of the State or Territory, and the purposes for which the funds requested upon this section will be used."

(b) Subsection (c) of section 1 of such act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No part of the amounts paid to the governor of a State or Territory under this section shall be used for the payment of administrative expenses incurred in furnishing relief and work relief under this section except upon the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and all such expenditures shall be reported to the corporation as often as required by it: Provided, That this act shall be construed to permit the governor of a State to use, under supervision of the State highway department, such loan in the improvement of highways as a part of his work-relief plan."

SEC. 4. Subsection (f) of section 1 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(f) As used in this section the term 'Territory' means Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia; and the term 'governor' shall include the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. Section 1 of such act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) For the purposes of this act, the provisions of section 13 of the act entitled 'An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia,' approved June 11, 1878 (D. C. Code, title 20, ch. 4, sec. 622) (relating to increasing the indebtedness of the District of Columbia), are hereby declared inoperative."

SEC. 6. Such act is further amended by adding after section 1 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to make available out of funds of the corporation the sum of $15,000,000, under the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, to the several States and Territories, to be used in furnishing relief and work relief to unemployed and needy transients, and to aid in their rehabilitation in training and work camps, or otherwise. Such sum shall be available for payment to the several States and Territories for the purposes of this section, upon application therefor by them through their governors (or, in the case of the District of Columbia, through the Commissioners of the District of Columbia) or such public relief agencies as the legislatures thereof (or, in the case of the District of Columbia, the Congress) may designate, and upon approval of such application as hereinafter provided.

"(b) Any State or Territory which desires to receive funds under this section shall set forth in its application the need for such funds, the plan by which it proposes to administer such funds for the relief and rehabilitation of transients, and such other information with respect to its transient problems as the corporation may by regulation prescribe. Upon approval by the corporation of any such application, in whole or in part, it shall make an estimate of the amount needed by the applicant for the purposes of this section for a reasonable period in advance. The amount so estimated shall be immediately paid by the corporation to the proper State or Territorial officials. Each amount so paid shall be considered as an outright grant to the State or Territory receiving the same, but the officials of the State or Territory who administer the amounts received under this section shall file with the corporation a statement of the disbursements made by them for the purposes of this section.

"(c) As used in this section the term 'Territory' means Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia."

SEC. 7. Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) To make loans to, or contracts with, States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public corporations, boards and commissions, and public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States, to aid in financing the construction, reconstruction, replacement, extension, or improvement of projects authorized under Federal, State, or municipal law which, in the opinion of the corporation, are needful and in the public interest, such loans or contracts to be made through the purchase of their securities, or otherwise, and for such purpose the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to bid for such securities: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph, from purchasing securities having a maturity of more than 10 years."

SEC. 8. Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 201 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon a comma and the following: "and to make loans to finance the construction of housing projects for families of officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, which are self-liquidating in character."

SEC. 9. Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(3) To make loans to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, urban water systems, irrigation systems, and markets (including markets for the purpose of buying, selling, warehousing, or storing of agricultural commodities and livestock), devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character."

SEC. 10. Nothing in subsection (a) of section 201 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 shall be held to render ineligible to purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures issued by any State or commission or other agency thereof secured by the pledge of receipts from taxes or other impositions upon or derived from the sale of gasoline, the avails of the sale of such debentures to be devoted exclusively to the improvement of the highways of such State.

SEC. 11. Subsection (a) of section 201 of such act is further amended by striking out "(other than by taxation)."

SEC. 12. Subsections (c) and (d) of section 201 of such act are amended to read as follows:

"(c) In order that the surpluses of agricultural commodities and livestock (including products manufactured directly therefrom) may not have a depressing effect upon current prices of such commodities and products, the corporation is authorized and directed to make loans, in such amounts as may in its judgment be necessary, for the purpose of financing sales of such surpluses in the markets of foreign countries in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce; but no such sales shall be financed by the corporation if, in its judgment, such sales will affect adversely the world markets for such commodities and products: Provided, however, That no such loan shall be made to finance the sale in the markets of foreign countries of cotton owned by the Federal Farm Board or the Cotton Stabilization Corporation.

"(d) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, if adequately secured, to bona fide institutions, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for their undertakings, for the purpose of enabling them to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of agricultural commodities and livestock produced in the United States and the products manufactured directly therefrom."

SEC. 13. Subsection (f) of section 201 of such act is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "but in determining the adequacy of security offered by a borrower applying under subsection (a) of this section the board may, in its discretion, accept as adequate security under this section, a lien on, or other satisfactory assurances of the application of, so much of the revenues from the project as may be required to meet interest payments during the period of the loan and assure refunding within a reasonable period: Provided further, That each loan made under paragraphs (1) to (5) of subsection (a) of this section after this subsection, as amended, takes effect, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 1 per cent more than the rate of interest established for the last issue of bonds of the United States preceding the making of such loan."

SEC. 14. The second proviso of subsection (g) of section 201 of such act is amended by striking out "(1) or (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1), (2), or (5)."

SEC. 15. Subsection (h) of section 201 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(h) The corporation may make loans under this section at any time prior to January 23, 1934: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the corporation from issuing funds to a borrower prior to January 23, 1939, under the terms of any agreement with the borrower made prior to January 23, 1934."

SEC. 16. Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 301 of such act is amended by striking out "July 1, 1933" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1934."

SEC. 17. Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to make loans to any fund created by any State for the purpose of insuring the repayment of deposits of public moneys of such State or any of its political subdivisions in banks or depositories qualified under the law of such State to receive such deposits. Such loans may be made at any time prior to January 23, 1934, and upon such terms and conditions as the corporation may prescribe; except that any fund which receives a loan under this paragraph shall be required to assign to the corporation, to the extent of such loan, all amounts which may be received by such fund as dividends or otherwise from the liquidation of any such bank or depository in which deposits of such public moneys were made. As used in this paragraph, the term 'States' includes the several States and Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] as amended and as it will appear in the RECORD preceding the vote upon it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. BLAINE's name was called). Making the same announcement as before concerning the absence of my colleague, and the fact that he is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], I wish to announce that if my colleague were present he would vote "nay," and I understand that if the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. BULOW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If the Senator from Rhode Island were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I do not know how that Senator would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McGILL (when his name was called). I have a pair on this vote with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], who is absent. If he were present, I understand he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If the Senator from Maine were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce a special pair on this question between the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] were present, he would vote "yea," and if the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] were present he would vote "nay."

I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY];

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SCHALL]. On this question he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" on this question, and I am informed that if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. If present, these Senators would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My colleague [Mr. WHEELER] is absent this afternoon on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 28, as follows:

So Mr. WAGNER's amendment in the nature of a substitute as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. BLAINE's name was called). Making the same announcement concerning the absence of my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] and his pair, I wish to state that, if present, on this vote he would vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE]. I withhold my vote.

Mr. McGILL (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. If he were present, I understand he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My colleague the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent on account of illness. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] are necessarily absent, and that if present they would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

I also desire to announce the special pair of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. If present, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] would vote "nay," and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. If present, these Senators would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 16, as follows:

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the emergency relief and construction act of 1932."

THE TRANSIENT CAMP

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a very important contribution toward the solution of the problem we have been discussing to-day has been made at Jacksonville, Fla., by the establishment and successful operation of a transients' camp there. The matter is disclosed in the statement I submit and ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE TRANSIENT CAMP—AN EXPERIMENT IN SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION

One phase of the problem facing the country as a result of the present economic conditions is that relating to the relief of the thousands of men who are wandering from place to place looking for work.

The extent of the problem is not accurately known, estimates of the number of these wanderers varying from 250,000 to 2,000,000 or more. That it is a problem can not be denied, and it concerns largely thousands of self-respecting men who have hitherto been able to support themselves and their families in comfort, but who now find themselves without work, often without a home, which they may have lost through foreclosure or tax sales, and who are traveling the country over in hopes of obtaining the means of bare subsistence. The professional hoboes, of course, are present in this throng, but their problem is different, and perhaps insoluble. It is the artisan, the former clerk, or small storekeeper whose present situation appeals to our sympathy and calls for a constructive program of relief and rehabilitation.

An attempt has been made to supply such a program in Jacksonville through the establishment of a camp for transients. The Florida National Guard placed at the disposal of the relief committee the barracks and other facilities at Camp Foster, situated about 10 miles from the city, and in consideration of such use it was agreed that the men housed in the camp would be employed in making improvements on the camp reservation, which consists of 1,000 acres. The cooperation of the mayor and the city police department was enthusiastically proffered, so that after the camp was established a man on pass from the camp was not molested, but those without passes were advised to go to the camp or run the risk of being considered vagrants and subject to arrest.

Funds were provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and two former service men who were without jobs were employed to operate the camp. Cots and blankets were obtained from the Army. Arrangements were made with the Salvation Army to have men gather at their building and at 9 o'clock every night trucks were sent to get these men and carry them to the camp.

From the beginning it was decided to eliminate red tape, but since this was to be a work camp, men whose physical condition or age precluded them from doing any kind of work were not admitted. A certain number of elderly men were given clerical or other work suited to their age, but since such positions are limited, only a small number were allowed to enter.

No time limit is placed on the length of stay. On admission, however, the applicant is told that he will be expected to remain at least one week, but he may stay indefinitely as long as he behaves himself. The rules are simple and are largely made and enforced by the men themselves. The possession or use of liquor is prohibited. Orderly conduct is required at all times. Seven hours is given to work daily except Sunday, and Saturday afternoon is a holiday. The camp is operated on a semimilitary plan, order and discipline being enforced by sergeants selected by the camp commander from the ex-service men who applied for admission. The cooking is done by former Army cooks, the storeroom is in charge of a former groceryman, the camp dispensary in charge of a former Army Hospital Corps man who has had in addition three years in a medical school. Each man is allowed the use of two blankets, a towel, and a pair of overalls, the latter obtained from the Red Cross. They are served a balanced Army ration of three meals a day and are paid 5 cents a day.

On admission each man is questioned separately. His name, his age, his home address, if any, and his occupation are entered on a card and he is told what is expected of him and that the camp is his camp and that he must do his part to keep it the kind of a place he would like to live in. He is then sent to take a hot shower bath, at which time a physical examination is made of his person and his clothes. The latter, if vermin infested, are disinfected and the man assigned to the receiving barracks, where he remains until danger of contamination is passed.

The camp population has grown from 18 on December 16, the opening day, to 418 on February 13, when this is written. During that time 392 men have passed through the camp, many leaving voluntarily, others being dismissed for various reasons. Among this group, coming from all parts of the United States, there have been clerks, cooks, accountants, architects, engineers, machinists, electricians, plumbers, carpenters, auto mechanics, farmers, fishermen, telegraphers, railroad trainmen, prize fighters, sailors, tailors, barbers, common laborers, and a sprinkling of college graduates who find themselves at a loose end in a world that can not provide a living to a skilled artisan, much less to a man without a trade. They range in age from 15 to 70, and they all want a job. The loafer and the bad actor, both of whom are in a very small minority, do not remain. Usually they leave voluntarily; sometimes the other men tell them to leave.

This story is called an experiment in social reconstruction. Let me explain that. In the first place, so far as possible, the men are given work in their own trade. The farmers have planted and are cultivating a truck farm which will furnish fresh vegetables to the camp mess. The barbers cut the men's hair. The shoemakers and tailors repair shoes and clothes. The electricians and linemen are replacing rotting poles with new poles cut on the reservation and are renovating the entire electrical equipment.

The automobile mechanics have repaired and put into operation many old trucks dating from war time and have made them available for use by the State military department. Since the camp is located on the St. Johns River, even the fishermen have found it possible to follow their vocation and have built themselves a boat from scrap lumber and are catching fish, which they keep in a live trap until enough are accumulated for a meal for 370 men. The prize fighters entertain their companions once a week with a boxing match, and the musicians have formed an orchestra. On Sunday afternoons religious services are held, attendance at which is not compulsory, but a very large majority of the camp population is present at these services. The older men give instruction to the youngsters, vocational training which fits them to become self-supporting when jobs again become available. Then, again, many of these men have been enabled to obtain work because they had a place where mail could reach them. Did you ever think what it would mean not to know where you would be to-morrow? These men might be picked up as vagrants and spend the night in jail, only to be turned loose the next day and told to move on, and have the process repeated the next day.

Then, again, I say it is an experiment in social reconstruction, because these men have shown a spirit of cooperation; yes, enthusiasm, of helpfulness to each other, of willingness to work for what they receive, that shows they have recovered their self-respect and have demonstrated a cheerfulness and hopefulness for the future that is astonishing under the circumstances.

Certain theorists have expressed the conviction that it would be harmful and demoralizing to have boys in association with older men in such a camp. Our experiences at Camp Foster is the contrary. The younger men and boys are getting vocational training from the older skilled workmen, and because discipline in this camp is largely self-imposed the influence of the older, settled men is distinctly beneficial. There is no guardhouse at Camp Foster. There is no need for one. There has been no disorder, no infractions of the civil or criminal laws, not one single article loaned to the men has been lost or stolen during the three months the camp has been formed.

There are many problems connected with transients which Camp Foster does not even attempt to solve. The transient family, the aged, the physically disabled, still await some solution of their troubles. Perhaps the young boys might be better helped in other ways, but our experience indicates that the numbers of the latter in the army of the wanderers has been greatly exaggerated. But we do think we are doing something for the great numbers of fine, self-respecting American citizens whose present plight is caused solely by inability to find a job, and that while they are waiting for better times we are preserving their self-respect, their respect for constituted authority, and allowing to them an opportunity to demonstrate a spirit of cooperation and mutual consideration which is a heartening augury for the future.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and it was signed by the Vice President.

PROMOTION OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY (H. DOC. NO. 560)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, and it was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

There are certain measures looking to the promotion of economic recovery which have been under consideration by the Congress and are so advanced toward completion or understanding as to seem possible of enactment during the present session.

1. It is most necessary that the principles of the bankruptcy bill which has already been acted upon by the House should be passed by the Senate. The whole object of the bill is to secure orderly cooperation between creditors and debtors, whether farmers, individuals, general corporations, or railroads, for mutual adjustment which will preserve the integrity and continuous operation of business, save the values of good will and the continuation of people in their occupations, and thus avoid destruction of the interest of both parties. This legislation is of the most critical importance in this period of readjustment. Incidentally, such a workable system is highly necessary in order to permit a certain minority of railroads to be so reorganized as to reduce fixed charges and thus relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of drains in prevention of destructive receiverships.

2. The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway treaty should be ratified. It not only will serve a great national purpose but is of importance now also to relieve unemployment by its construction.

3. The enactment by the House of the general principles embodied in the Glass banking bill, which has already passed the Senate, will greatly contribute to reestablish confidence. It is the first constructive step to remedy the prime weakness of our whole economic life—that is, organization of our credit system.

4. Authority should be given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to increase the amount of loans to States and municipalities for purposes of assistance to distress on the same terms as the present act. While the corporation has funds available which will last until July, it is desirable that they should be supplemented.

5. It seems clear that the domestic-allotment plan is wholly unworkable. It will do far greater harm than good to agriculture.

Pending the return of the great commercial countries to the gold standard and the consequent increase in world consumption, and thus rise in world prices, it is essential temporarily to reduce farm production so as to remove the back-breaking surpluses of agricultural products and thus to raise agricultural income. The plan proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture some time since for temporary leasing of marginal lands is the least harmful and the most hopeful of all the plans which have been proposed. It has the merit of direct action in reducing supply to demand and thus unquestionably increasing prices; it would affect all farm products; give equal benefits to all farmers; is free of increased bureaucracy; very much less costly; and could be covered by a manufacturers' excise tax of probably 1 per cent to 2 per cent upon these commodities. It would also largely eliminate the tax and interest problems which the Congress is seeking to solve at much greater cost.

6. I earnestly recommend repeal of the procedure of the House of Representatives in publishing loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. These transactions should be open to the fullest degree to the representatives of the Congress, but their publication in the last few months has led to widespread, mostly innocent misinterpretation, vicious in effect, by depositors and alarmists who do not recognize that such borrowings represent an endeavor of the institution to provide funds needed in service to their respective communities. This publication is destroying the usefulness and effectiveness of the Reconstruction Corporation, is exaggerating fears, and is introducing new elements of grave danger. It is drying up the very sources of credit. The effect of such publication is forcing payment by distressed debtors to replenish bank funds. It is causing the hoarding of currency.

7. While the Congress could not enact such a law during this session I recommend that it should institute an inquiry with view to the early expansion of the home loan discount banks into a general mortgage discount system to be owned cooperatively by banks and mortgage companies (with adequate encouragement of the special activities of building and loan associations) and thus to parallel in the field of long-time credit the service of the Federal reserve system for short-time credit. Such a system would relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of many of its functions, would assist in the orderly readjustment of the present situation, and through private initiative would serve many purposes for which the Congress is striving through direct action by the Government.

8. Peace would be promoted and the killing of men checked in various parts of the world to-day, if the Executive had the authority to join with other nations in preventing the shipment of arms to such localities. I earnestly recommend that the legislation proposed for this purpose be enacted.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 20, 1933.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar 1310, House bill 14359, to amend the bankruptcy act.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is necessarily absent. It was his wish that the bill be made the unfinished business. I hope the motion will prevail.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to call up the independent offices appropriation bill. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the following bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 21, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art love in its tenderest form, let go that precious consolation, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." Draw aside the veil and enable us to perceive the divine compassion and the all-sufficiency of Thy holy will. Speak in the whispers of that peace which comforts the heart of a child. Our citizens of every section, abide with them in great measures of material and spiritual blessings. Strengthen our fellowship, instruct us by Thy teachings, and become to us a light on our pathway. Thou God of all peoples and of all lands, set in motion divine influences that shall flow like ocean tides around the world until all shall be bathed in their floods and the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters cover the sea. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 18, 1933, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5122. An act to provide for the purchase and sale of cotton under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14199) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. STEIWER, Mr. CUTTING, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL—FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and in this connection I would ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes for the purpose of explaining the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report is not coming up to-day?

Mr. BYRNS. No; but I want to make an explanatory statement of about five minutes, and I think the statement will be of interest to every Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, this report contains, of course, a report upon the amendments which have been made to the appropriations carried in the regular appropriation bill. It was necessary, under the rules of the House, for the conferees to return the other amendments to the House for its action, because they are filled with legislation. I refer particularly to the so-called economy amendment of the Senate and also to the reorganization provision, both of which are contained in the same amendment. There are also two other amendments that it is not necessary to refer to.

Your committee of conference has been in steady and almost continuous session with the Senate since last Monday morning. It took us the entire week to go through this very long amendment and consider it carefully, as we endeavored to do.

We agreed on many things. There are some things to which we did not agree.

I think I may say for the conferees that we were exceedingly anxious, even though some of us may have favored some matters not contained in the motion I will present, to report a bill which would not provoke a discussion, if I may say so, at the other end of the Capitol and probably jeopardize the passage of the bill between now and March 4, or to put into the bill any amendment which might possibly provoke a veto. For this reason members of the conference committee probably did not insist upon some things that they would have insisted upon had it not been for this fact, and also the feeling that later on, if it is desired to amend the measure, there will be no trouble at the next session of Congress in bringing the matter to the attention of the Congress.

The amendment which I will submit represents the views of the House conferees as a majority. There are some members of the conference committee who do not agree to every particular provision in this amendment, but the amendment represents the views of the majority.

I am perfectly well aware that in a long amendment like this it will be impossible for any Member of the House to hear it read from the desk and fully understand all of its provisions.

I have always believed that notwithstanding this is a large membership and notwithstanding the fact that we have to have rules in order to do business, there is no reason why every Member of the House should not have an opportunity to express himself upon major matters as they come before the House, even though to a limited extent, and it is my desire that every Member of the House shall have an opportunity to-morrow to offer any amendment that is germane to the motion that I shall make, and have the House vote upon it. Therefore, we have prepared our motion and in order to give the House the fullest information at the earliest opportunity as to what we are going to propose, I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD along with this report, and I wish also to advise the House that copies of the amendment will be available after 1 or 2 o'clock this afternoon in the Committee on Appropriations, so that you can see the motion and not have to wait until in the morning to look it over.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The amendment which will be offered reads as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. BYRNS to Senate amendment No. 14, Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, fiscal year 1934 (H. R. 13520): A motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 14, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and insert the following:

"SEC. 4. (a) The provisions of the following sections of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, are hereby continued in full force and effect during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, namely, sections 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107 (except paragraph (5) of subsection (a) thereof), 108, 109, 112, 201, 203, 205, 206 (except subsection (a) thereof), 211, 214, 216, 304, 315, 317, 318, and 323 and, for the purpose of continuing such sections in the application of such sections with respect to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the figures '1933' shall be read as '1934'; the figures '1934' as '1935'; and the figures '1935' as '1936'; and, in the case of sections 102 and 203, the figures '1932' shall be read as '1933,' except that in the application of such sections with respect to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934 (but not with respect to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933), the following amendments shall apply:

"(1) Section 104 (a) is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: 'and (12) special delivery messengers in the Postal Service'; and section 105 (d) (2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'special delivery messengers in the Postal Service, but in the case of such messengers, the sum of $400 shall not be included in the calculation of the rate of their compensation for the purposes of this title;'.

"(2) Section 106 is amended by striking out 'except judges whose compensation may not under the Constitution be diminished during their continuance in office' and inserting in lieu thereof 'except judges whose compensation prior to retirement or resignation could not under the Constitution have been diminished.'

"(3) Section 216 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That no employee under the classified civil service shall be furloughed under the provisions of this section for a total of more than 90 days during the fiscal year 1934, except after full and complete compliance with all the provisions of the civil service laws and regulations relating to reductions in personnel.'

"(4) Section 317 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That no part of any appropriation for "public works," nor any part of any allotment or portion available for "public works" under any appropriation, shall be transferred pursuant to the authority of this section to any appropriation for expenditure for personnel unless such personnel is required upon or in connection with "public works." "Public works" as used in this section shall comprise all projects falling in the general classes enumerated in Budget Statement No. 9, pages A177 to A182, inclusive, of the Budget for the fiscal year 1934, and shall also include the procurement of new airplanes and the construction of vessels under appropriations for "Increase of the Navy." The interpretation by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, or by the President in the cases of the War Department and the Navy Department, of "public works," as defined and designated herein, shall be conclusive.'

"(b) All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of such sections, as amended, are hereby suspended during the period in which such sections, as amended, are in effect.

"(c) No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any suit against the United States or (unless brought by the United States) against any officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States arising out of the application, as provided in this section, of such sections 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, or 112, as amended, unless such suit involves the Constitution of the United States.

"(d) The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of the amendments made in subsection (a) of this section shall not be used for any purpose, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"(e) Each permanent specific annual appropriation available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, is hereby reduced for that fiscal year by such estimated amount as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget may determine will be equivalent to the savings that will be effected in such appropriation by reason of the application of this section and section 7.

"SEC. 5. Effective the first day of the month next following the passage of this act, in the application of Title I of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, and section 4 of this act, in any case where the annual rate of compensation of any position is in excess of $1,000, the provisions reducing compensation shall not operate to reduce the total amount paid for any month to any incumbent of any such position unless the total amount earned by such incumbent in such month exceeds $83.33: Provided, That any such reduction made in any case where the total amount earned by any such incumbent in any month exceeds $83.33 shall not operate to reduce the total amount to be paid to such incumbent for such month to less than $83.33.

"SEC. 6. (a) Sections 103 and 215 of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, shall be held applicable to the officers and employees of the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama, and to officers and employees of the United States (including enlisted personnel) holding official station outside the continental United States, only to the extent of depriving each of them of one month's leave of absence with pay during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934.

"(b) During the fiscal year 1934, deductions on account of legislative furlough shall be made each month from the compensation of each officer or employee subject to the furlough provisions of Title I of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, as continued by section 4 (a) of this act, at the rate of 8⅓ per cent per month regardless of the number of days of such furlough actually taken by any such officer or employee in any month.

"SEC. 7. No administrative promotions in the civil branch of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia shall be made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934: Provided, That the filling of a vacancy, when authorized by the President, by the appointment of an employee of a lower grade, shall not be construed as an administrative promotion, but no such appointment shall increase the compensation of such employee to a rate in excess of the minimum rate of the grade to which such employee is appointed, unless such minimum rate would require an actual reduction in compensation: Provided further, That the restoration of employees to their former grades or their advancement to intermediate grades following reductions of compensation for disciplinary reasons shall not be construed to be administrative promotions for the purposes of this section. The provisions of this section shall not apply to commissioned, commissioned warrant, warrant, and enlisted personnel, and cadets, of the Coast Guard.

"SEC. 8. All officers and employees of the United States Government or of the government of the District of Columbia who had reached the retirement age prescribed for automatic separation from the service on or before July 1, 1932, and who were continued in active service for a period of less than 30 days after June 30, 1932, pursuant to an Executive order issued under authority of section 204 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, shall be regarded as having been retired and entitled to annuity beginning with the day following the date of separation from active service, instead of from August 1, 1932, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to make payments accordingly from the civil-service retirement and disability fund.

"SEC. 9. The allowance provided for in the act entitled 'An act to permit payments for the operation of motor cycles and automobiles used for necessary travel on official business, on a mileage basis in lieu of actual operating expenses,' approved February 14, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, sec. 73a), for travel ordered after the date of enactment of this act shall not exceed 2 cents per mile in the case of travel by motor cycle or 5 cents per mile in the case of travel by automobile.

"SEC. 10. Whenever by or under authority of law actual expenses for travel may be allowed to officers or employees of the United States, such allowances, in the case of travel ordered after the date of enactment of this act, shall not exceed the lowest first-class rate by the transportation facility used in such travel.

"SEC. 11. From and after the date of enactment of this act, the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, sec. 26a), shall not apply to any employees of the Veterans' Administration homes, hospitals, or combined facilities where, in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the public interest requires that such employees should be excepted from the provisions thereof. As to those employees excepted from the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931, seven hours shall constitute a workday on Saturday and labor in excess of four hours on Saturdays shall not entitle such employees to an equal shortening of the workday on some other day or to additional compensation therefor.

"SEC. 12. Assignments of officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to permanent duty in the Philippines, on the Asiatic Station, or in China, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Panama Canal Zone shall be for not less than three years. No such officer shall be transferred to duty in the continental United States before the expiration of such period unless the health of such officer or the public interest requires such transfer, and the reason for the transfer shall be stated in the order directing such transfer.

"SEC. 13. The act entitled 'An act to provide for deducting any debt due the United States from any judgment recovered against the United States by such debtor,' approved March 3, 1875 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 227), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'That when any final judgment recovered against the United States duly allowed by legal authority shall be presented to the Comptroller General of the United States for payment, and the plaintiff therein shall be indebted to the United States in any manner, whether as principal or surety, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller General of the United States to withhold payment of an amount of such judgment equal to the debt thus due to the United States; and if such plaintiff assents to such set-off, and discharges his judgment or an amount thereof equal to said debt, the Comptroller General of the United States shall execute a discharge of the debt due from the plaintiff to the United States. But if such plaintiff denies his indebtedness to the United States, or refuses to consent to the set-off, then the Comptroller General of the United States shall withhold payment of such further amount of such judgment as in his opinion will be sufficient to cover all legal charges and costs in prosecuting the debt of the United States to final judgment. And if such debt is not aready in suit, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller General of the United States to cause legal proceedings to be immediately commenced to enforce the same, and to cause the same to be prosecuted to final judgment with all reasonable dispatch. And if in such action judgment shall be rendered against the United States, or the amount recovered for debt and costs shall be less than the amount so withheld as before provided, the balance shall then be paid over to such plaintiff by such Comptroller General of the United States with 6 per cent interest thereon for the time it has been withheld from the plaintiff.'

"SEC. 14. Section 319 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is repealed as of June 30, 1932; and the rate of interest to be allowed upon judgments against the United States and overpayments in respect of internal-revenue taxes shall be the rate applicable thereto prior to the enactment of section 319 of such act.

"SEC. 15. All laws providing for permanent specific annual appropriations are hereby modified so that, after June 30, 1934, in lieu of the appropriations made therein, the sums available for the purposes of such laws shall be such sums (not exceeding the amounts now provided in such laws) as may hereafter be provided therefor from time to time by Congress.

"SEC. 16. Section 322 of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is amended by adding at the end of the section the following proviso: ': Provided further, That the provisions of this section as applicable to rentals shall apply only where the rental to be paid shall exceed $2,000 per annum.'

"SEC. 17. Title IV of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, is amended to read as follows:

"'TITLE IV—REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

"'DECLARATION OF STANDARD

"'SEC. 401. The Congress hereby declares that a serious emergency exists by reason of the general economic depression; that it is imperative to reduce drastically governmental expenditures; and that such reduction may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this title.

"'Accordingly, the President shall investigate the present organization of all executive and administrative agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the following purposes:

"'(a) To reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government;

"'(b) To increase the efficiency of the operations of the Government to the fullest extent practicable within the revenues;

"'(c) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

"'(d) To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and by abolishing such agencies and/or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government;

"'(e) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort; and

"'(f) To segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character.

"'DEFINITION OF EXECUTIVE AGENCY

"'SEC. 402. When used in this title, the term "executive agency" means any commission, independent establishment, board, bureau, division, service, or office in the executive branch of the Government and, except as provided in section 403, includes the executive departments.

"'POWER OF PRESIDENT

"'SEC. 403. Whenever the President, after investigation, shall find and declare that any regrouping, consolidation, transfer, or abolition of any executive agency or agencies and/or the functions thereof is necessary to accomplish any of the purposes set forth in section 401 of this title, he may by Executive order—

"'(a) Transfer the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency;

"'(b) Consolidate the functions vested in any executive agency; or

"'(c) Abolish the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof; and

"'(d) Designate and fix the name and functions of any consolidated activity or executive agency and the title, powers, and duties of its executive head; except that the President shall not have authority under this title to abolish or transfer an executive department and/or all the functions thereof.

"'SEC. 404. The President's order directing any transfer, consolidation, or elimination under the provisions of this title shall also make provision for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property (including office equipment), and personnel, affected by such transfer, consolidation, or elimination. In any case of a transfer or consolidation under the provisions of this title, the President's order shall also make provision for the transfer of such unexpended balances of appropriations available for use in connection with the function or agency transferred or consolidated, as he deems necessary by reason of the transfer or consolidation, for use in connection with the transferred or consolidated function or for the use of the agency to which the transfer is made or of the agency resulting from such consolidation.

"'SAVING PROVISIONS

"'SEC. 405. (a) All orders, rules, regulations, permits, or other privileges made, issued, or granted by or in respect of any executive agency or function transferred or consolidated with any other executive agency or function under the provisions of this title, and in effect at the time of the transfer or consolidation, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer or consolidation had not occurred, until modified, superseded, or repealed.

"'(b) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of any executive agency or other officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of any transfer of authority, power, and duties from one officer or executive agency of the Government to another under the provisions of this title, but the court, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the head of the executive agency or other officer of the United States to whom the authority, powers, and duties are transferred.

"'(c) All laws relating to any executive agency or function transferred or consolidated with any other executive agency or function under the provisions of this title, shall, in so far as such laws are not inapplicable, remain in full force and effect, and shall be administered by the head of the executive agency to which the transfer is made or with which the consolidation is effected.

"'WINDING UP AFFAIRS OF AGENCIES

"'SEC. 406. In the case of the elimination of any executive agency or function, the President's order providing for such elimination shall make provision for winding up the affairs of the executive agency eliminated or the affairs of the executive agency with respect to the functions eliminated, as the case may be.

"'EFFECTIVE DATE OF EXECUTIVE ORDER

"'SEC. 407. Whenever the President makes an Executive order under the provisions of this title, such Executive order shall be submitted to the Congress while in session and shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days after such transmission, unless Congress shall by law provide for an earlier effective date of such Executive order or orders: Provided, That if Congress shall adjourn before the expiration of 60 calendar days from the date of such transmission such Executive order shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days from the opening day of the next succeeding regular or special session.

"'APPROPRIATIONS IMPOUNDED

"'SEC. 408. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any purpose but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"'TERMINATION OF POWER

"'SEC. 409. The authority granted to the President under section 403 shall terminate upon the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act unless otherwise provided by Congress.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Two hundred and ninety-one gentlemen present, a quorum.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is coming up to-morrow and what is the reason for this request?

The SPEAKER. The conference report just referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

REPEAL OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States and agree to the same.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. DYER. I demand a second.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. It is impossible for Democrats over on this side to get any time to oppose this repeal resolution from the majority leader, who has moved to pass it under suspension of rules, and it is necessary to have some one demand a second who is against it, and who will yield his time to the opposition, and we will have only 20 minutes' debate to the side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have some one against it when the Member qualifies.

Mr. DYER. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Missouri opposed to the resolution?

Mr. DYER. I am not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolution?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. I am opposed to the resolution.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is his purpose to divide the time between those in favor and those opposed, or will he yield to those only who are in favor of the resolution?

Mr. RAINEY. I am going to yield only to those who are for the resolution, but I intend to yield to gentlemen on that side.

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MOORE, will yield time to those opposed to the resolution?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLANTON. There is no question of objection. I make a point of order. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, a second has been demanded, and it takes unanimous consent to agree that the second shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOORE] for 20 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss this resolution except to quote from a speech made by the proponent of prohibition, Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, in the Senate, July 30, 1917, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 5553 and 5554, in which he states among other statements——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois has no right to attack a Senator on the floor of the House.

Mr. RAINEY. I am not attacking any Senator, I am approving of what he said.

Mr. RANKIN. It is an indirect attack, and he can not read from the Senate proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi is well taken. Speaker Longworth held in an elaborate ruling that a Member of the House could not refer to a Senator and quote what he said. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Has not a Member a right to quote anything that a Senator said?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just ruled on that.

Mr. RAINEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I say this on my own responsibility. I would vote to submit any amendment to the States in order to preserve the right of petition, and for that reason I am voting for this. I voted for the submission of the five amendments which have been added to the Constitution since I have been a Member of this House.

During my period of service here I have voted to submit to the States every amendment which seemed to have the support of any considerable bloc of people. I have already voted to submit five amendments, the income-tax amendment, the amendment providing for the direct election of Senators, the prohibition amendment—the eighteenth—the woman's suffrage amendment, and the lame-duck amendment, and I expect to vote now to submit this amendment.

I refuse to stand in the gateway in an attempt to prevent the people of the United States from amending their own Constitution in the way provided by the Constitution itself. I am not arrogant enough to do that.

A Member of this House is not voting wet or dry when he votes to submit this amendment. He is simply conceding to the States the right of petition and enormous petitions have been filed here for the resubmission of this amendment. There seem to be a great many people in the United States who would like to see the Federal Government obtain as revenue the profits now made by bootleggers, and I must confess that personally I sympathize with them in the position they take, and this Government certainly needs revenue. At the present time we are borrowing just half the amount it costs to run this Government. This can not go on forever. We are going to reach the end of our borrowing power sooner than some people think. Every time we borrow five hundred million or a billion dollars we are in effect mortgaging all the homes and all the farms in every State in this Union for that amount of money, and we are placing a mortgage on them which must be paid in advance of the mortgages these owners have been compelled to place on their property, and unwillingly compelled to place there. Every dollar of profit in this country is pledged to the payment of the immense sums we are adding now to the national debt.

I know what the rules of this House are. I can not quote here what has been said on the floor of another body, but, of course, what has been said there can not be changed and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS disclose it all. I, however, desire now to appropriate the language of a very prominent prohibition leader as my own, and I simply make this statement in order to show that the quotation I am now making is not my own language so that I can relieve myself of the charge of plagiarism. I now read the following statement into the RECORD:

* * * The Member of Congress who will not vote for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the decision of the States, where it belongs, unless he personally believes it should become a part of the Constitution, usurps the function of the States, arrogates to himself and the Federal Government a prerogative that belongs to the States and violates the very essence of their sovereignty. Furthermore, over 12,000,000 of the American people have petitioned Congress to submit the prohibition amendment to the States. In refusing these people the right to appeal to the only tribunal having the power of amendment—the tribunal of the States—for the redress of what they consider one of the most terrible grievances in the Republic, Congress would deny to them one of the most sacred of all popular rights—the right of petition. Were I opposed on principle to nation-wide prohibition I would vote to submit the amendment to the States in order that they might exercise one of their fundamental rights. An issue is thus presented by the nation-wide amendment entirely independent of prohibition, and that issue is expressed in two questions:

(1) Shall Senators and Representatives in Congress, either wholly or partly, substitute themselves for the States as the amending power of the Constitution, thereby centralizing sovereignty at Washington to a degree threatening the extinction of the State?

(2) Shall they refuse the people the right of petition?

Senator GEORGE, of Mississippi, a vigorous and outspoken antiprohibitionist, was a member of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred a national prohibition amendment some 40 years ago. He joined in a favorable report for its submission on the ground that to do otherwise would be to deny to millions of people the right of petition. * * *

* * * At the close of this debate we will have an opportunity to enable the States to exercise their highest function—the right to shape, alter, and develop the Federal Constitution. They are the proper tribunal to decide the fate of this amendment. They compose the mightiest array of free Commonwealths united in a federated whole the world has ever seen. There are chapters in the history of each that add honor to American citizenship. If there is anything in the amendment subversive of their liberties and their welfare, they can be trusted to condemn it. Let not Congress assume to judge for them. Let Congress discharge its preliminary task of submission and stand aside. Let it put in motion the referendum provided by the Nation's organic law—the method of amendment the States themselves established when they created the Constitution. Let the States perform the duty which remains the sole instance of their sovereignty over the Federal Government itself. If the State and Nation may each retain the attributes contemplated in the Constitution, if each shall be kept within its sphere and permitted to perform its appointed agency, the most beneficent system of government yet devised will be strengthened and glorified for all time.

As I view the matter, the Member of either branch of the American Congress who denies the power of amendment to the States, especially an amendment which vast numbers of the people desire the States to consider, violates the basic principles both of the Constitution and of popular government, repudiates the fundamental rights of the States, and overturns the two most sacred privileges the people possess, the privileges of referendum and of petition.

In conclusion, I desire to say that I hope this amendment will pass. It will take three-fourths of the States to ratify it. Opposition to its passage now by prohibition leaders shows a decided weakness on their part. Framers of the Constitution have provided that it is not easily changed and can only be changed by three-fourths of the States, and if three-fourths of the States want to amend the Constitution they have the right to do so. If this amendment is adopted the question will be remitted to the States in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, and the States will have the right to amend, to reject, or to adopt it in the manner provided by the Constitution itself.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now that each Member may have five legislative days in which to extend his own remarks?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the success or failure of national prohibition is of peculiar interest to the people of my State. It was in Maine some 87 years ago that the first prohibitory law ever enacted was placed upon our statute books. In 1884 it was written into our State constitution. Since I came to manhood and cast my first vote I have seen going on in Maine the same struggle as regards prohibition, resubmission, and repeal that is to-day being enacted on a larger scale in the Nation. For 27 years before coming to this Congress I voted dry, voted against the money and efforts of out-of-State liquor organizations to nullify our State laws, voted for what I believed and still believe to be for the best interests of the homes of Maine and the women and children of my State. For 11 years as a Member of this House I have voted to support and enforce the eighteenth amendment. My convictions remain unchanged.

I realize, of course, that I am one of a very definite minority, and that the result of the coming vote is a foregone conclusion. The Republican leaders of this House are supporting this resolution, which to my mind does violence to a solemn promise made to the people of this country in our party platform, while the Democratic leaders have had recourse to arbitrary caucus methods seeking to override the very consciences of their members. Nevertheless, I make this prediction: That the experience of Maine will be the experience of the Nation, and that unless some definite assurance against the return of the saloon is given to the American people no Member of this House will live to see national prohibition wiped from the pages of the Federal Constitution. [Applause.]

The great danger, however, as all must realize, lies in the breakdown of enforcement and the nullification of law that is already foreshadowed and bound to exist during the years of the interregnum between the passage of this resolution and its final disposition. The recent election was an economic revolution, a demand on the part of the people, not for rum, but for better economic and social conditions. That demand has not yet been met, nor will this resolution meet it. It is a poor time to encourage lawlessness or to let loose a flood of intoxicating liquor on a mechanized world seething with social unrest.

Futile as it may be, little as I may add to this discussion in the few moments allowed me, it does not seem fitting that Members from the original prohibition State should be altogether silent at this time, representing as we do a State that in the past has furnished the world leaders in several great humanitarian movements: William Ladd, in the cause of world peace and a high court of nations; Elijah Parish Lovejoy, a leader and martyr in the cause of freedom of the press; and Neal Dow, the father of prohibition. Standing here in this dark hour, when the friends of prohibition and all that pertains to it seem but few, let me say that I am proud of Gen. Neal Dow as a great Maine citizen, humanitarian, and soldier, and that I take pride in the pioneer prohibition record of my people. Maine came into the Union as a compromise between right and wrong, but the men and women of Maine, as a group, have never yet so compromised. As a humble Member of this House I have sought, in a small way, to maintain the traditions of my State; and while it will never be given to me to lead the forward march of a great cause, yet, God helping me, I do not propose to lead a retreat in this great moral and humanitarian movement. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, there are only two sides to this war. A man ought to be on one side or the other. He ought to be dry or he ought to be wet. I respect the views of any man who thinks the eighteenth amendment ought to be repealed and stands by his convictions. For the man who deep down in his heart does not think it ought to be repealed, and believes that its repeal would endanger every fireside in America, but nevertheless votes for repeal and assigns as his reason the declarations of some delegates to some convention or the action of some party caucus, I have only profound sympathy. No job in the world is worth a sacrifice like that. I pity the man who says that he is going to vote for repeal here and then go home and vote against repeal. He is neither a soldier nor a sailor. He might be a marine, fighting first on water and then on land, except for the fact that the marines are good fighters and are always loyal to one flag. The Bible speaks about him when it says:

Thou art neither hot nor cold; I will spew thee out of my mouth.

But my profoundest commiseration goes out to men who have voted on both sides of this question, and especially to those who, as lately as last December, voted against repeal and now vote for repeal. There has been no party convention since then. The same platform declarations existed then that exist now. A party caucus may have intervened, but whoever heard of a party caucus being more powerful than a party platform? Will gentlemen who voted "no" in December, despite their party platform, vote "aye" now and attempt to excuse themselves by pointing to a party caucus? The suggestion is absurd.

There are few, if any, men who have won honor by fighting on both sides in any war. The man who says that he is going to vote wet here and then go home and vote dry exhibits a versatility which might have enabled him, if he had been in the World War, to have piloted the Germans through Belgium and then have joined with the Allies in the defense of Paris.

I will not bring the enemy to my people's doorsteps and then undertake to repel him. I will fight him all the way. And neither as a citizen, a Democrat who expects always to be a Democrat, nor as a public servant shall I offer any apology for so doing to any individual on earth, believing, as I do, that I am keeping faith with those who sent me here and whose agent I am.

I shall not "hold with the hare and run with the hound." I shall not sacrifice my convictions upon any altar of alleged party loyalty. The Democratic Party of my fathers is a party of good morals and good government, and I shall do my utmost as an humble member to keep it so. The principles of that party have never required any man to sacrifice his conscientious convictions upon a moral question. If I am true to my people and true to myself, I shall not be untrue to the Democratic Party.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LICHTENWALNER].

Mr. LICHTENWALNER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House. I am very proud to have the opportunity of doing my part here to-day to bring about the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and prohibition. I have no doubt this result will follow within a year if we pass this resolution to-day.

In season and out of season I have fought against the principle involved in the eighteenth amendment, when Congress and the State legislatures amended the Constitution to try to regulate the personal habits of the people and when it invaded their private rights and liberties it wrote into the Constitution what might better have been passed as town ordinances in those communities which desired to be bone dry.

I did not believe at the time that prohibition was passed that it represented the majority will of the people at all, and I think that the results of 13 years of attempted enforcement justify that belief, because no law can be enforced that is against the will of the people.

The Government has been most liberal in appropriating money for enforcement and those of us who are willing to face the facts know the results. Prohibition has not brought about temperance. We know now that it has had the opposite effect. We know that for every saloon that has been eliminated that there have been three speakeasies to replace it. Where local authorities were formerly able to enforce the laws preventing liquor being sold to minors and to intoxicated persons and on Sundays, it is now an undercover business and therefore passed out of control. So that prohibition must now be pronounced a national failure.

But more important and most serious of all is the fact that billions of dollars which would have flowed into the United States Treasury in revenue, and which might have gone to the reduction of taxes and of the public debt, have reverted instead to racketeers and gangsters in most of our cities and have created lawlessness much more serious than the breaking of liquor laws.

So that while I was and am against prohibition in principle, my opinion has been further confirmed by its results; but irrespective of my views, now that the Government under the present economic conditions needs the revenue so badly, this alone would be sufficient for me to form my opinion regarding it. I therefore hope that this resolution will pass. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GRANFIELD].

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago, as a member of the State Legislature in Massachusetts, I voted against the ratification of the eighteenth amendment. My attitude on this great problem has not changed. I rejoice in the opportunity that is offered to vote for this resolution. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON] a few moments ago in his remarks to the House made some reference to the saloon. I have heard a great deal about the saloon. Every time a dry discusses prohibition he speaks about the return of the saloon. None of them say anything about the speakeasy, with all of its evils, which has taken the place of the saloon. [Applause.]

This talk of the return of the saloon is nothing but subterfuge. A cursory investigation of the conditions as they exist should convince the most ardent drys in this country that their concern should be with the abolition of the present day speakeasy, and not with the possibilities of the return of the saloon. As bad as they claim the saloon was, the speakeasy of to-day, with its attendant evils, is a far more serious problem. Instead of being concerned about the return of the saloon, let these gentlemen suggest ways and means by which we can eliminate the speakeasy from our national life; I am for immediate action of this character.

I regret there is insufficient time for me to discuss this issue further; however, under the right of extension of my remarks, at a later date I shall speak on this problem at length. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the resolution now before us would decide the policy of a Nation. Within the hour and without opportunity for debate or amendment we must vote for or against the return of the saloon. I am against it. The resolution does not comport with the Republican nor the Democratic platforms. It gives no guarantee against the old-time saloon. This resolution opens wide the door. It will pass to-day because a great political party has bound and gagged its members and prevented the exercise of their individual rights and judgment. Feeding the hungry and solving economic problems are pushed aside.

The home-farm mortgage and high taxes are the twin giants that now grind our people to the quick. This resolution destroys neither of these giants of despair. It feeds both. The free flow of liquor will not lift the mortgage nor reduce taxes for the masses.

Sagging farm-commodity prices and unemployment are of the very essence of our Nation's distress. What is the Congress of the United States doing to-day?

Are we lifting the mortgage?

Are we sheltering the homeless?

Are we employing the millions?

Are we feeding the hungry?

Do we hush the infant's cry for food?

Can you spend a dollar for drink and at the same time spend it for food?

Seriously, can you put dollars into the till of the grocer, the butcher, the department store, the garage, the filling station, and the movies by cashing the pay check in the saloon?

Will the saloon inject lifeblood into languishing agriculture and commerce and industry?

Will the free flow of liquor help men to secure jobs?

Will its unlimited supply help men to house and clothe and feed their wives and helpless children and educate our youth?

This is the machine age. Will liquor make safer our highways and railways and factories?

With what liquors shall our pilots be served before taking the air?

You talk of revenues. Taxes come directly or indirectly from the pockets of the people. I know and you know this is not the sound, unselfish judgment of the American people but the hue and cry of paid propagandists. This is the culmination of a deep-laid plan of heartless millionaires to shift the tax burden from their pockets to the cravings of the helpless.

This is an economic crime you would perpetrate to-day. The free flow of liquor never did and never can solve the problems of this or any other country. Wet Britain and Germany are suffering worse to-day than we.

This hour calls for hope and faith and courage.

This Congress is playing at tweedledum and tweedledee. The farmer and laborer starve while you enrich the brewer and shift the tax burden from the millionaire to the honest toiler.

It should not be. I do not believe the American people will so decree.

Gladstone said:

> It is the duty of government to make it easier to do right and harder to do wrong.

We are writing history to-day. To ignore the present and the future is a travesty on statesmanship.

I respect the honest convictions of all men. But let us at this hour recall the words of the immortal Lincoln:

> With malice toward none, with charity for all, but with firmness for the right, as God gives us to see the right.

So let us cast our votes this day.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON].

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, the pending resolution provides for an absolute and unqualified repeal of the eighteenth amendment. This may be in accordance with the platform declaration of the Democratic Party, but it is my belief that a majority of the people will not approve, when they come to realize that passage and ratification of this resolution will restore the old order to the liquor traffic.

It was repeatedly stated at the Chicago conventions and seems to be a prevailing sentiment that we do not want a return of the saloon. The majority of those who favor change and modification of our national prohibition laws protest against the open saloon. But, notwithstanding this well-known opposition, we are about to approve a resolution which, if ratified, will return the open saloon, with all its attendant evils, to a large area of our land. When this becomes evident there will be a wave of resentment against this backward step; and I wish to say to you, my friends on the Democratic side of this House who are dry, that it will then be no alibi for you to say that your party platform called for a repeal or your party caucus bound you to vote for a repeal. This involves a moral question which each one should settle according to his or her convictions and is outside of party dictation.

We should reject this resolution to-day and then write one embodying such changes and modifications as the experience of the past 12 years suggests, profiting by that experience and avoiding the evils of the liquor traffic of former days. I venture the prediction now that this repeal resolution will not be ratified by the required number of States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON] has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, the eminent lexicographer, Noah Webster, defines the word platform as follows: "A declaration of principles on which a group of persons or a party stand, and on which they appeal for support. A declaration of principles and policies of government adopted by a political party."

The Republican Party in its platform adopted in Chicago, June, 1932, favored the submission of this question to the States to be acted upon by State conventions called for that purpose.

The Democratic platform adopted in Chicago, July, 1932, contained the two following paragraphs:

First:

> We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe. We hereby declare this should be the platform of the Democratic Party.

Second:

> We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal.

In the light of the planks in the platforms of the two parties which I have just read, it appears to my mind to be a distinct breach of faith with the people of our country if we fail to vote to-day for the submission of this question. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, if the House passes this resolution to-day, every Republican and every Democrat who votes for it votes not only to repudiate the most solemn and binding pledge of his party platform but also for the return of the saloon, the most sinister influence that ever cursed American life and politics. The final ratification of this proposed amendment insures the return of the saloon. It will be here the moment the thirty-sixth State gives it final approval to this proposed amendment to the Constitution.

Never in the political history of the United States was there such a betrayal of a party-platform pledge. Both the Republican and Democratic platforms contained the most solemn and unequivocal pledge that there should be no return of the saloon. The Republican platform pledged "to safeguard our citizens everywhere from the return of the saloon." The Democratic platform likewise promised "such measures by the several States as will actually promote temperance, effectively prevent the saloon."

Never did parties state in more unequivocal language a more positive position, and never in the political history of this country did congressional party leadership more brazenly violate the pledge of their parties. Does a platform declaration mean nothing to the party leadership in this House? If such a party pledge is thus so violently repudiated, what confidence do we justify in the judgment of the people? Can we complain if they lose confidence in the parliamentary machinery of our country?

What kind of unholy alliance is this between the Republican and Democratic leadership of the House, whose inevitable end is the return of the saloon if this program of repeal is ever carried out? I understand it is based upon the action of the so-called Republican wet bloc. It, no doubt, is inspired by the same type of political wisdom that induced President Hoover to reverse his position from that of 1928. I am sure he yielded with reluctance to the advice of those who urged compromise upon this great moral problem.

He suffered an overwhelming defeat. He probably could not have been elected in such a financial crisis even if he would have stood firm as in 1928, but he would have had the satisfaction of knowing that he was on the right side of a great moral problem. And what a fight the good people of this country would have put up against the boast of Franklin D. Roosevelt, that "from this day the eighteenth amendment is doomed," if they had had the opportunity to express themselves on that question. And what a towering figure these same people would have had to rally around as this wild, wet craze is sweeping the country, a craze that is sure to wane with the reign of booze that is to begin on March 4.

I want here to pay tribute to those Democrats who have refused to be bound by the Democratic caucus, that last relic of parliamentary slavery in the Congress of the United States. They had the moral courage to stand by their party platform against the return of the saloon. They are right when they declare that their party platform claims a higher fealty than the dictation of a secret caucus. May their tribe increase.

What a contrast is the attitude of the distinguished Speaker who having failed the first hour of this session to jam a naked repeal resolution through the House has now resorted to the secret caucus to force his party in the House to repudiate the platform upon which he was elected both to Congress and to the second highest office in the gift of the Nation. What a tragedy that such a great career in this House should have for its valedictory the betrayal of his party platform and the invitation contained in this resolution for the return of the old saloon with all its evils and abuses.

If one should judge from our actions in this House what was the most important matter for consideration since we met in December, he would be forced to conclude that nothing was important except that the people be given booze to drink. Yet people are hungry and children are crying for food. The farmer was never in such a desperate plight. His farm and property are on the auction block. He is facing bankruptcy. What have we done for him? All we have done thus far is to set before him the mirage and vision of a schooner of ice-cold beer in the dead of winter and a bottle of booze and said "Drink and be damned."

Let no one be deceived concerning the ease with which the eighteenth amendment is going to be repealed. The framers of the Constitution made it difficult to amend and alter. Let no one imagine that submitting this to the States is going to settle it. It is only the opening gun in a battle that will rock your district from center to circumference. It will penetrate every precinct in your district in your campaign in 1934. Then we will answer for our votes to-day.

Vote against this resolution and thus vote against the return of the saloon. Vote for it and condemnation will assail you from a million firesides where little children play. Vote for it and anathemas will thunder from 100,000 pulpits for this base and infamous treason to party platforms. Vote for it and it will kindle fires under you in every precinct in your district in 1934. Vote for it and it will call to the colors of decency and sobriety millions of women who hate the very name of the saloon and who will never consent to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Vote against it and unborn generations will call you blessed. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield one and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in the last election, in both political parties, there was absolutely no dispute or debate on two propositions. One was the prevention of the return of the saloon and the other was the protection of dry States against wet States. To-day, in the pending resolution, there is not presented for our consideration any prevention of the return of the saloon. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] if he will not let us, by unanimous consent, insert in this resolution, in line 3, on page 2, after the word "liquors," the words "and the return of the saloon," so that it will include with the new proposed prohibition of "transportation and importation of intoxicating liquors," the prevention of the return of the saloon in any State or Territory in violation of the laws thereof.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] should be good enough sport not to interrupt the gentleman in a 1½-minute speech.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. I will not make that request. This resolution has passed the Senate. It comes up now before the House on motion to suspend the rules. It can not be amended in the way the gentleman suggests.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. It can be by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAINEY. For this reason I shall object to such a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. Speaker, I yield one and one-half minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, the fight for repeal is not led by the hierarchy of any church; it is led by the "lower archy" of all of the churches of America. We are endeavoring to lift up the pulpits to the level of the pews.

The legislative road to heaven has been infested with bandits. In order to abolish the bandits we have got to abolish the road. The taxpayer has paid the police to catch the bootlegger. The customer has paid the bootlegger to run away from the police. No wonder the bootlegger has considered himself the hero of a victory, while the policeman considers himself the victim of a double-cross. The customer is the taxpayer.

The budget of crime shows a surplus. The Budget of Government shows a deficit. Let us abolish the fortune of crime and reestablish the integrity of the finances of Government, the enemy of crime. Let us have one on the House. Prosit! [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am, indeed, gratified to have the chance of voting for this resolution. The resolution carries out the pledges and the promises not only of the Democratic convention but of the Republican convention, and has been approved by over 22,000,000 people and 42 States, notwithstanding that the Anti-Saloon League in Washington has been endeavoring to thwart the mandate of the 22,000,000 people by injecting sectionalism into the matter and to mislead willfully the membership of this House, as was done when the eighteenth amendment was first submitted.

All this resolution does is to submit the question to the people for approval or disapproval, and it protects the rights of every State. The charges by gentlemen that this will bring back the saloon is unjustifiable and unwarranted, and I hope will not mislead anyone. The threats by the forces of Bishop Cannon will be of no avail, as the membership of this House must recognize that this law-destroying, crime-breeding prohibition law should and must be repealed if law and order are to be restored. The sooner favorable action is taken the sooner law and order will be reestablished and the will of the people carried out.

In answer to the gentleman from Georgia, let me say that if the Members vote as they profess to vote at home, the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, in order that the record may be clear, I ask that my statement, which I have sent to the desk, be read by the Clerk in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

A vote for to-day's repeal resolution is a vote of surrender on the main issue between the two great parties on the proposed repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

There was and is no issue as to the submission of a proposal to repeal or modify the eighteenth amendment. It is the right of the people to vote on any outstanding question. This is particularly true when it affects their own Constitution. On this both parties are agreed. The only question was and is what form the proposed modification or repeal amendment should take.

The Democratic Party indorsed naked repeal. The Republican Party opposed it. The Republican Party insisted that the repeal amendment contain some constitutional guaranty against the return of the saloon. The entire campaign, so far as it concerned the eighteenth amendment, was fought on this outstanding difference in the two major platforms.

The resolution which comes before the House to-day contains no such provision. It is an abandonment of any attempt at such action. The task of writing such a proposed constitutional guaranty is simple. No definition of a saloon is needed. A plain provision to take private profit out of the liquor business or to declare that the sale of intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises where the sale is made be illegal is wholly sufficient.

In the absence of such a provision it seems to us that no Republican who took the 1932 party platform seriously should vote in favor of this resolution.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, I am glad that I have lived to see this day. For 13 years the American people have looked forward to it. Let us do our part to make it a happy day by voting to sustain our party platform, restore confidence, bring back temperance, and reduce taxation. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the repeal resolution that was considered by the House on December 5 because I believed an effort would be made by those sponsoring the legislation to have the Federal Government call and supervise the conventions to be held in the several States for the purpose of ratifying or rejecting the proposal.

I am now of the opinion that those plans have been abandoned and that the States themselves will be permitted to refer the question of repeal to the people.

For these reasons, and in conformity with my campaign pledges, I am supporting the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, this is an hour that may be fraught with gravest consequences to every home in America. It is on behalf of the American home that I rise in opposition to Senate Joint Resolution No. 211 which has for its ultimate purpose the invasion of that home by the liquor legions of the world. Not by my vote shall they enter lawfully. It has been bad enough to have such unlawful intrusion as we have witnessed in recent years, and I for one shall not sanction an effort to return to the lawful liquor desecration of the American home which was permitted prior to the passage of the eighteenth amendment.

If I appear pronounced in my convictions, let me assure you that they are founded on facts. For nearly 25 years I was connected with institutional work in Vermont. Thousands of cases came under my observation; many of them had my personal attention. It is a matter of record that in approximately 75 per cent of those cases, liquor was the underlying cause for the unfortunate circumstances in which the victim found himself. May the American home be uppermost in our minds when we cast our votes on this resolution.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, to-day we are making history. For the first time we are giving to the American people an opportunity, through the convention method, to determine directly and authoritatively whether they wish to repeal an amendment to the Constitution. The repeal does not seek to change the fundamental law which was subscribed to by Washington, Franklin, Madison, Hamilton, and the other immortals of the Constitutional Convention. To them the eighteenth amendment would have been an unforgivable affront. The resolution now to be adopted proposes to repeal an amendment to the Constitution which, in a period of hysteria, was incorporated by a later generation in the fundamental law without any mandate of the American people.

It is a satisfaction that the repeal of this un-American amendment is not the proposal of any party but is now supported by a majority of the two historic political parties.

That this repeal of the eighteenth amendment will be ratified by a large majority of the States and by at least three-fourths of the American electorate is reasonably sure. If, unhappily, 13 States, numbering less than one-fifth of the American people, should fail to ratify this amendment—and such failure is improbable—then the basic right of majority rule will not be defeated, for, if a large majority of the people on this solemn referendum favor such repeal, then their representatives in Congress will in that event enforce the will of the people by repealing all enforcing legislation. Happily, this will not be necessary. We propose the direct method of tearing up by the roots this upas tree of prohibition, whose blighting shadow has too long lain upon our people.

The American people, after a practical trial of the eighteenth amendment of over 10 years, are now convinced that it was a fatal error to write into the Constitution an amendment which was not only subversive of the fundamental principle of local self-government but also offended the greater and even more basic ideal of American individualism in vainly attempting, by governmental edict, to dictate to the citizen a narrow moral code of conduct in a matter of personal habit. This ill-fated experiment, which may have been "noble in motive," was doomed to failure from the beginning. It was alien to the individualistic spirit of America. The revolt of the American people against the eighteenth amendment is one of the most hopeful signs of the times, for it clearly indicates that the American citizen has not wholly lost his ancient love of individual liberty and his jealous hatred of government tyranny.

On February 7, 1930, I first had the privilege of expressing my views upon the eighteenth amendment in the Seventy-first Congress. I then tried to base the argument not upon the ponderables of the problem but upon the higher principle of the right of the individual, within reasonable limits, to order his own life and to be the judge of his own moral code. At that time those who shared my views were but a small minority in the House. This did not discourage me, for I had faith in the American people, who sometimes think slowly but, in the long run, surely. I believed then, and expressed my belief, that this great people were too wise not to acknowledge a demonstrated error, and I added:

> Above all, they have not lost their love of individual liberty and their jealousy of governmental power, and if they do not, in their own good time, end this "witches' sabbath" of moral demagoguery, hypocrisy, and corruption, then I have much misjudged the character of the American people.

To-day we may be making history even in a larger sense than the mere repeal of the intolerable eighteenth amendment. For the last 25 years there has been a seemingly irresistible movement in this country to convert these United States into the united state. If history teaches anything, it is that a unitary state is not possible in a territory so vast as ours and with a people who are so numerous and heterogeneous. The unitary state, if it should finally triumph, would inevitably fall of its own weight, and of this the eighteenth amendment is a striking example.

To-day may mark the turn of the tide and the restoration of the Constitution of the fathers. If we shall return to the federated Republic which they founded, and respect the great and essential principle of local self-government, then many of the evils of the present hour will pass away, for the causes of our present discontent can be largely found in the impossible attempt to govern more than 100,000,000 people from Washington. "Back to the Constitution of the fathers" should be the rallying cry of all Americans. The broad path to complete centralization is the path to destruction. Let us take the straight and narrow path which returns to the earlier and nobler ideals of the Republic.

To-day is a new emancipation day for the American people, an emancipation not of one race but of all the people.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, this is not the question as to whether or not there shall be a return of the saloon, but the bigger and broader one as to whether or not we shall take prohibition out of the United States Constitution. The matter of the return of the saloon will then be for the States, and if the people of the respective States do not want saloons there will be none. Prohibition is not the business of the Congress. The writers of the Constitution never intended it should be. It has been clearly demonstrated after 14 years of Federal prohibition that you can not legislate sobriety and temperance into a great free people. Drunkenness and disregard for the law, as a result of prohibition, are greater to-day than they have ever been.

Mr. Speaker, I was a Member of Congress when the resolution, out of which came the eighteenth amendment, was adopted the 17th of December, 1919. I voted against it and did all I possibly could to prevent its passage. Ever since that day I have looked forward to the time when we would repeal it. This vote to-day is the first step. In quick order I look for the 48 States to ratify this amendment to repeal the eighteenth amendment. This vote will itself have a good effect upon the country. The ratification will have a better one. This is not a Democratic or Republican victory. It is one of the people. Thousands of Republicans voted the Democratic ticket on November 8, last, believing that party more than the Republican Party would hasten the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. A majority of the Republican Members of this Congress will join to-day in voting with a majority of the Democratic Members in carrying out the mandate of the country, and that mandate is to take the prohibition issue of Congress, and prohibition itself, out of the Constitution and return it to the States, where it belongs and where it will be safely handled, as previously. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in my football days, in a hospital, on an operating table, with my leg and ankle being set where they had been broken in three places, there was still pounding in my ears the cry, "Hold that line! Hold that line! Hold that line!" And from America to-day here in this Chamber comes the earnest cry of anxious mothers and fathers of 48 States, "Hold that line!"

It is the open saloon that is bucking the line. Are we going to hold it? It is the hideous liquor traffic that is trying to break through. Are we going to hold it?

It takes brave men here to-day to hold the line. It takes men who are not afraid of wet newspaper criticism; who are not afraid of wet radio attacks; who can withstand barbed ridicule; who can not be destroyed by frame-ups; who do not quail under unjust misrepresentation; who do not lay down when obstacles arise; who can resist all pressure political and otherwise; who love their country better than they do public office and position; men who are willing to carry on, even when they receive threats of being "put on the spot," such as I received this morning; no other kind of men need try to-day to hold the line. Let me read you one of these threats I received in my mail this morning.

Mr. SIROVICH. Hold that line. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. You wets ought to be good enough sports not to interrupt a 2-minute speech on a most serious question. Saloons and liquor may break through this line to-day, but down the field this side of the goal stands an unerring fullback who never fails when downing a runner—the fathers and mothers of America—by whom saloons shall not pass. And let wet politicians now carrying the ball beware of the final tackle, for the fall will be hard. Here is the threat I received.

This letter says:

> The people are tired of tactics in reference to prohibition. You believe the hypocritical preachers can keep you in office. Maybe they can, but they can not keep you alive. We are sending you an ultimatum. Vote right. Keep your nose out of prohibition or we are going to "bump you off."

It takes men who are not afraid of being "bumped off" to fight to hold the line. We will likely not hold it to-day, and I will likely be defeated for voting dry, and I may be "bumped off," but I will have been faithful to the trust my constituents have in me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this is the only method by which the question of prohibition can be settled. After all, the final decision under our Constitution is left to the people. I am in favor of the resolution, not because I believe that liquor is good but because I know that prohibition is bad.

A change in our liquor policy is necessary, not only because of the widespread violation of the law by the criminal element but the general and universal disregard of the law by well-meaning, law-abiding people.

I am in favor of the resolution not because I favor the licensed saloon but because I am opposed to the unlicensed speakeasy.

I am in favor of the resolution because it will be possible to tax liquor, not only because of depleted Federal and State treasuries but because of the dangerous enrichment of the racketeers and the criminal element.

Mr. Speaker, the lines of prohibition have broken. Twelve years' experimenting has demonstrated the impossibility of enforcement and the widespread use of liquor. We must place the liquor traffic under proper control. Mr. Speaker, we have been fighting for this resolution for the past 10 years. We are now too weary and too law-abiding to celebrate our victory. Congress will now be able to give its undivided attention to economic matters, less controversial but far more important. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to do away with the eighteenth amendment and its handmaiden of iniquity, the Volstead Act, with its highjackers, rum runners, snipe entrapments, "dirty business of wire tapping," shotgun murders, poison alcohol, use of children as spies, of coeds as stool pigeons, and of prostitutes as decoys, with its moral knavery and its political skullduggery. Let us flee from prohibition as one would from a foul dungeon, from a charnel house.

I am one of those who believe that a platform is something to stand upon, not something merely to get in on. The Democratic platform advocates this resolution. I am for it.

I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who wants "to hold the line," that his line is nothing but a "rope of sand." I say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] that his talk about the failure to include some provision against the saloon is a lot of idle chatter. He would not vote for the resolution if it did include such a provision. Each State must determine for itself the type of supervision it wishes over the distribution of liquor. Kansas shall not dictate to any State.

I say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON] that there was a preponderating majority for this resolution during the recent election; 21,000,000 people spoke in thunderous tones. They want the eighteenth amendment consigned to limbo. The verdict of the people last November is a tribute to the returning common sense of our Democracy—the Democracy of Wilson, who vetoed the Volstead Act as not setting well on the stomach of the Nation.

Repeal of the eighteenth amendment, as has been argued, does not mean the return of liquor, since liquor has always been with us; its flow has never been dammed. Prohibition simply opened wider the sluices. New York City had 26,000 saloons before prohibition; it now has over 32,000 speakeasies. Under our very noses here in Washington during the 10 years after prohibition as compared with the 10 years before prohibition there have been five times as many arrests for drunkenness of persons under 21 years of age. Save the youth of the Nation by voting for this resolution.

We, wet veterans, have been patient. We have been battling for 10 years or more. Our struggle at first seemed hopeless, but we have carried on despite catcalls, howlings, and abuse heaped upon us. We kept on even despite threats of impeachment from the gentleman from Texas

[Mr. BLANTON]. I pay tribute to my wet colleagues, who, during 10 years, have had the wisdom, foresight, and courage to know the truth and to battle for it. To them, rather than to the belated wets, the half-hearted wets, the frightened wets, and the bandwagon wets, belongs the palm of victory.

Ratification is to be by conventions. There seems to be much pother about the convention procedure. There should be none. I may be wrong, but I incline to the belief that by reasonable interpretation the word "convention" as used in Article V of the Constitution precludes and repels the idea that the convention shall be called, elected, organized, or governed by congressional fiat. I incline to the belief that that must and shall be a State matter exclusively.

Without going into the question of the power of Congress in this regard, I would say as a matter of expediency, as a matter of policy, that even if Congress had the power to do all this, it should not exercise that power. In doing so Congress would irritate the States; it would stand in the rôle of interfering with the liberty of the States. The States would deem themselves affronted. Ratification might thereby be imperiled.

Each State shall set up its own procedure. There may be 48 different types of machinery. That is unfortunate, but can not be helped.

I would prefer to say that Congress compel each State to elect its delegates to a convention at large. But I do not dare advocate this for fear that I would again be imperiling ratification. The States would resent even this dictation from above. The election of delegates at large would prevent gerrymandering by the drys.

It may be necessary, however, to blink the possibility of gerrymandering and refrain from exercising compulsion of any sort upon the States, in order to get the amendment ratified expeditiously.

The Supreme Court, in the case of Lesser against Garnett, held that the ratification by the States and the acceptance by the Secretary of State of the appropriate certificate is conclusive on questions of procedure in ratifying legislatures. There can be no different ruling on ratifying conventions. If the Secretary of State of the United States certifies to the certificates of ratification as submitted by the States, that should end the matter. Even the Supreme Court can not go behind the certificates submitted by the States certifying to the ratification. Therefore, no matter what method the State pursues as to the calling, electing, and organizing the convention, just as soon as the certificate of ratification by the State is submitted to Washington the method of conduct or procedure of delegates at the convention becomes a closed incident.

See interesting argument in this regard made by United States District Judge William Clark, page 12, Senate Document 181, Seventy-second Congress, second session.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, the fair question about prohibition is not whether there are widespread violations, but what conditions would be to-day if we had no prohibition. If prohibition is to be repealed on the ground of its violation, the same logic would compel the repeal of most of our criminal statutes. Theft and robbery and murder are rampant in the country. Is that any reason for repealing the penal laws? Is there anyone who believes for a minute that in this day of world chaos, with its demoralizations, with its lowering of ethical standards everywhere, pay-day nights would be better, family life would be happier, highways would be safer, drinking among young people would be less, industrial life would be more secure, and political life would be cleaner if we had a legalized liquor traffic?

Let no one delude himself with the idea that the liquor traffic can be made decent simply by repealing the laws against it. It will be as it has always been, a destroyer of family life, a demoralizer of industrial and social life and a corrupter of political life.

Oh, this resolution may comply with the Democratic platform, but let no Republican here contend for a moment that it complies with the Republican platform. It plainly violates it. It tears from the Federal Government every vestige of power to prevent the return of the open saloon. Gentlemen may express a pious hope that the saloon will not return; but if this resolution is ratified, the saloon will return.

This is a surrender to the liquor forces which have always been lawless, and at a time when above all else we need to promote a spirit of law observance in the country. We boast of our liberty. But we can not long maintain liberty unless side by side with liberty we maintain respect for law, which alone makes liberty possible in the world. It is a vain delusion to imagine that surrender to the lawless liquor traffic will help to maintain it. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, we are considering an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Article V of the Constitution provides:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.

When we deem it necessary we shall propose amendments to this Constitution. I am unwilling to propose an amendment to which, under the circumstances, I am opposed. This resolution repeals the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution because I believe it is the first step toward the return of the saloon. It may be said that matter will be left to the States, but gentlemen sitting here that I can see have told me privately that the adoption by the States of this resolution means the return of the saloon. The Republican Party in its national platform declared against the return of the saloon, but this resolution permits its return.

If this proposal were anything new in the control of the liquor traffic we might be willing to try it, but we are going back to what we left after more than 100 years of trial. I am supporting prohibition, with all the difficulties we have had, because I think it is still the best method thus far advanced to control the liquor traffic. [Applause.] There is insistent demand for the consideration of economic questions to afford the people of the country relief. Instead of giving relief to the country to-day, what this resolution will do will be to take the first step to give relief to the liquor traffic.

My friends, let us vote down this resolution. As a member of the Judiciary Committee I listened to the arguments in support of prohibition, by teachers, religious leaders, economists, athletes, the representatives of home and school associations, parent-teachers' associations, social workers, and the representatives of many other groups from all over this country who enumerated the benefits of prohibition.

I am willing to cast my vote with those unselfish persons and with the thousands of others who to-day are praying that we shall not take a backward step upon this important question. These earnest, sincere, and unselfish persons desire a sober nation. I believe prohibition helped to bring this about. I am unwilling to return to a system of State control that we found unsatisfactory.

Let us not take the first step to bring back the liquor traffic which, in many instances, debauched our manhood, prostituted our womanhood, and pauperized our childhood. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD upon this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, to my mind this day is not only an historical day in this country and throughout the world, but to those people who are interested in a democratic form of government it points a new way and inaugurates a new era in the conduct of our democratic form of government, because for the first time the Congress of the United States is recognizing that we are made up, not of States, not of State legislatures, but that all Federal powers come from the people of the States, and we are sending this resolution back to conventions in the States for the nearest thing to a direct referendum that was ever had in this entire country. [Applause.]

I have always favored the convention system of ratifying constitutional amendments. I tried to have the convention system incorporated in the child-labor amendment and in the lame-duck amendment.

I am for repeal of the eighteenth amendment and always have been. I do not attempt any alibi that I am merely for the submission of the question to the people. I have some sympathy with the sentiment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]. If his personal views coincide with those of his constituents, then I have no complaint against the right course he is following; but I frankly state, after this resolution is submitted, I am for the ratification of it and the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. I am going into my State, if anybody asks me, and openly advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see this question taken out of our hands and placed in other hands, for one reason if for no other—it has furnished every possible form of alibi that can be conjured in a legislative mind. Some Members are for submission only, careful not to go so far as to say they are for repeal; others would be for it if it has a specific provision abolishing the saloon—whatever that is; others would be for it, if it were submitted to legislatures; others would be for it, if it were not brought up under suspension of the rules, and so forth. I am wondering if each and every one of these provisions were incorporated in the resolution would one vote be changed here to-day. In the last analysis the real test is whether you are against the eighteenth amendment or for its retention. As for me, I am against it.

As to the saloon alibi, let me point out to those who fall back on that as their reason for not voting for the resolution that the resolution permits every State to determine for itself whether it will have the saloon. During the last week the great Empire State of New York practically determined that there would be no saloons in the State of New York. When the State of New York leads the way upon such a question other States usually follow:

It is we who shall vote for this resolution who are "holding the line," let me say to my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. We are "holding the line" to-day in the cause of a true democratic form of government for these United States. So let us dispose of this question now and forever. Let us send the repeal amendment to the States where it belongs and from whose jurisdiction it never should have been taken. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 289, nays 121, not voting 16, as follows:

The following pairs were announced.

On the vote:

Mr. Knutson and Mr. Hornor (for) with Mr. Christgau (against).
Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Montague (for) with Mr. Hare (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Brand of Georgia with Mr. Free.
Mr. Hall of Mississippi with Mr. Smith of Idaho.
Mr. Larsen with Mr. Reid of Illinois.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by my colleague, Mr. GLOVER, who is confined to his bed by illness, to announce that if he were present he would vote "no."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MONTAGUE, is confined to his bed by sickness. He desires me to state that if he were present he would vote "aye."

Mr. SMITH of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HORNOR, is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MAAS, is unavoidably and unexpectedly absent and can not secure a pair. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. SMITH, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. REID, are unavoidably absent, and if here they would vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

REPEAL OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, to-day the House of Representatives, for the second time this session of Congress, is afforded the opportunity to vote on repealing the Eighteenth Amendment. On the first day of the present session we repealists in the House lacked only six votes of the two-thirds necessary, while to-day, with the additional impetus afforded by the Senate's favorable action last week, together with the added section of protection for dry States, every conceivable objection, in my opinion, is now squarely met. In accordance with our party pledges, we must pass Senate Joint Resolution No. 211 to-day, and by so doing, keep faith with the American people.

During the past few months we have witnessed the most remarkable and overwhelming demonstration of resolute determination ever staged by an awakened and thoroughly aroused population resolved and intent upon forcing abolishment of an unwise and deservedly unpopular law, one that has fostered and been the malevolent and prolific source of growing intemperance and crime, lost revenue and the consequent resort to other and unbearable forms of taxation, much of our distressing unemployment, and countless other economic and civic disorders.

I have direct reference to that unparalleled expression at the polls last November of popular sentiment against prohibition. The people of the Nation have given us a profound and impressive exhibition of their refusal to longer tolerate the imposition of this statute which has to date cost us $11,000,000,000 or more in lost revenue and is adding to this stupendous sum at the rate of nearly a million dollars a day.

The sovereign will of the people on this vital problem has been manifested in clear, lucid, and unmistakable terms, impossible of misinterpretation. It is our sacred duty and obligation to heed and obey this outspoken mandate of the voters and, by voting to-day for passage of Senate Joint Resolution No. 211, do our part in ridding the country at once of the most vexatious and troublesome measure ever inflicted upon a people renowned for their inherent and strict sense of personal right and liberty.

The overwhelming deluge of wet votes in the November elections—insistent and imperative in expressing the urgent and determined demand of the great majority of our patriotic, law-abiding, and sincere thinking citizens for immediate and outright repeal of the obnoxious eighteenth amendment—is the natural and inevitable culmination of many years' dissatisfaction and disgust engendered by the pronounced and ignoble failure of this gigantic attempt to regulate by legislative decree the personal habits and morals of our people.

Wide dissemination of statistics and facts relating to the enormous increase of criminal activity, the sinister racketeering of organized bootleggers and gangsters and the disgraceful corruption and bribery which have been notoriously rampant even among the ranks of the forces ostensibly devoted to prohibition enforcement, have awakened the people to the realization that paradoxically, prohibition has proved the greatest force imaginable for the promotion of the very evils the enactment of the eighteenth amendment was supposed to prevent and make impossible of recurrence.

Striking proof of the deep root this sentiment against prohibition has taken in the hearts and minds of the people is shown by the fact that seventeen States have either repealed or never had State prohibition laws; twenty-six that have retained their State laws to date are refusing to spend a cent for enforcement, while the five remaining States are making but a negligible effort to assist Federal enforcement officers.

Confronted by this decisive indication of our country's attitude and facing the most serious industrial and unemployment crisis the world has ever known, it would be criminal folly as well as the basest betrayal of the people to disregard their eloquent plea at the polls last November for outright and immediate repeal of prohibition.

Repeal of the eighteenth amendment is not only a patriotic duty of the highest order, but a fundamental economic necessity of extreme urgency. The wheels of industry are moving imperceptibly, business is stagnant, millions are unemployed in this great national calamity and world-wide catastrophe, and are dependent upon the fast-diminishing resources of welfare agencies for barest necessities of life.

Beginning with the producers of beverages, repeal will start a great chain of activity that will rejuvenate our entire business structure. Hundreds of thousands of unemployed will be permanently enlisted in the great fight being waged for business recovery. By no means, however, will employees of the various beverage concerns be the sole beneficiaries of this great progressive step. In the coal industry, thousands of miners will be put back to work immediately digging the approximately 3,000,000 tons of coal that was annually required for the brewing of beer alone. The automobile trucking industry and the stricken railroads will, of necessity, increase the number of their employees to haul the products that amounted to thirteen and one-half millions of tons yearly from just the brewers of beer, requiring constant operation of many hundreds of locomotives and the use of more than 200,000 freight cars annually.

These three major industries are splendidly representative of how hundreds of other commercial units of our economic system will be helped by the powerful stimulus repeal will bring to our harassed country. The farmers will find an immediate outlet for the vast quantities of surplus grain now flooding our markets and the demand will be instantly increased for various metals, machinery, bottles, bottle caps, corks, boxes, labels, printers' ink, barrels, lumber, miscellaneous hardware, and countless other articles too numerous to mention.

Repeal is an absolute and vital economic necessity, not only because of the work it will create for so many hundreds of thousands, and the tremendous impetus it will give to business in general throughout the entire country, but from the extremely important standpoint of a most prolific source of urgently needed revenue.

The tax on alcoholic beverages proved the only definite and dependable source of revenue of our Government for 50 years prior to the World War. From 1868 it did not vary more than 9 to 10 per cent from year to year, even in periods of business depression and financial panics. It steadily increased from $39,000,000 in 1867 to $284,000,000 in 1917. Before the World War and the enactment of the income tax our Government's income was made up almost entirely of customs revenue and taxes on liquor and tobacco. Depending as it does on foreign trade, the customs revenue varies widely and invariably declines in years of economic disturbance.

The customs receipts for the fiscal year ended last June were $240,000,000 less than in 1928. The income tax is yielding less than half the 1928 total. The only source that is holding up with any degree of steadiness is the miscellaneous internal revenue, which is comprised chiefly of the tobacco tax. Even these receipts have dropped somewhat from their normal yield.

By their whole-hearted indorsement of repeal the American people have shown their emphatic disapproval of a revenue-losing statute that is largely responsible for the tax condition that has caused the loss of thousands of homes and farms because of inability of their owners to pay taxes that have steadily mounted as incomes and national revenue have diminished. The taxation of beer alone will yield our impoverished Treasury a hundred and twenty-five millions of dollars or more yearly in a form of revenue that will inflict no burden whatsoever on the taxpayers and will make possible a great reduction in the present heavy burden of other taxes.

The vote last November 8 was virtually an ultimatum from the American people to release this golden stream of revenue which would help fill our empty Treasury and assist in bringing immediate relief to the Nation. To fail in this emergency to pass the repeal resolution to-day would be an un-American departure from the very principles of self-government upon which our great Nation was founded. The clear-cut issue confronting us to-day must be unflinchingly met in a true spirit of cooperation and nonpartisan unity of action. Jobs for hundreds of thousands, business for hundreds of industries, will spring into being upon the abolishment of prohibition, while every day we delay costs the Government a vast sum in indispensable and vitally needed revenue.

Let us show that in a great national crisis our American Government of Washington and Lincoln is still equal to any emergency. Let us show, by submitting this great question to the people for their final decision and judgment in State conventions, that ours is still the truly representative form of self-government that our forefathers bequeathed us. Let us triumph again, as we have many times in the past, over the relentless forces of the depression that are to-day besieging our country from within, and by removing this great obstacle to progress and ultimate recovery, show that we are still able and capable of directing our destiny as the greatest Nation on earth.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 211, which is now before us for a vote, reads as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Section 1 repeals the eighteenth amendment.

Section 2 attempts to protect dry States.

Section 3 provides State ratification by the convention method within seven years. It does not say a word against the return of the saloon!

Before the enactment of the prohibitory amendment, the saloon was a political center, in some respects a social center, and a very great power. The influence and political power of the American saloon were tremendous. Do you want it in action again? The saloon was the resort and center of almost everything that was undesirable and harmful. Experience shows the inability of the States acting alone to control the saloon.

This resolution is for the return of the saloon in America with no restriction guarding against its admitted evils.

I believe in the right of our people to decide under what laws they shall live and I desire to give to them every opportunity for an honest expression of such desire, but I can not vote to submit a resolution of this character which gives them no opportunity to vote against the saloon, which I believe the people of my district do not wish to see returned. The resolution as introduced in the Senate gave Congress the power to prevent the return of the saloon. It was amended in the Senate by a vote of 33 to 32, with 31 not voting, striking out the section which gave Congress this power.

Four years ago Herbert Hoover, Republican candidate for President, vigorously opposed the return of the saloon, and Alfred E. Smith, Democratic candidate for President, in his acceptance speech said:

When I stated that the saloon is and ought to be a defunct institution in this country I meant it. I mean it to-day. I will never advocate or approve any law which directly or indirectly permits the return of the saloon.

President Hoover, in his letter of acceptance in 1932, said:

It is my belief that in order to remedy present evils a change is necessary by which we resummon a proper share of initiative and responsibility which the very essence of our Government demands shall rest upon the States and local authorities. That change must avoid the return of the saloon.

It is my conviction that the nature of this change, and one upon which all reasonable people can find common ground, is that each State shall be given the right to deal with the problem as it may determine, but subject to absolute guaranties in the Constitution of the United States to protect each State from interference and invasion by its neighbors, and that in no part of the United States shall there be a return of the saloon system, with its inevitable political and social corruption and its organized interference with other States.

Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt—now the President elect—on August 28, 1932, at Seagirt, said:

Thus the Democratic platform expressly and unequivocally opposes the return of the saloon and with equal emphasis it demands that there be Federal control of the liquor traffic to protect dry States.

The Republican national platform, 1932, says:

We do not favor a submission limited to the issue of retention or repeal, for the American Nation never in its history has gone backward and in this case the progress which has been thus far made must be preserved while the evils must be eliminated.

We therefore believe that the people should have an opportunity to pass upon a proposed amendment the provision of which, while retaining in the Federal Government power to preserve the gains already made in dealing with the evils inherent in the liquor traffic, shall allow States to deal with the problem as their citizens may determine, but subject always to the power of the Federal Government to protect those States where prohibition may exist and safeguard our citizens everywhere from the return of the saloon and attendant abuses.

The 1932 Democratic platform has a plank as follows:

We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal. We urge the enactment of such measures by the several States as will actually promote temperance, effectively prevent the return of the saloon, and bring the liquor traffic into the open under complete supervision and control by the States.

Notice the clause therein—"effectively prevent the return of the saloon."

President Hoover, President-elect Roosevelt, and ex-Gov. Alfred E. Smith, as shown by these statements, all agree that the saloon should not be allowed to return. The National Government is the only power that can make certain this outcome. Many of those who have been fighting for repeal have declared their opposition to the return of the saloon. "The saloon, never" has been one of their frequent public utterances. This resolution is not in accordance with the Republican national platform. Notwithstanding all this, the section in the resolution as it was introduced, giving to the Federal Government the right to prevent the return of the saloon, has been taken out, and under our present parliamentary procedure we in the House are not permitted to attempt to restore it. I believe we should make the return of the saloon impossible. This resolution does not so do, but, rather, it provides:

Out goes the eighteenth amendment; in comes the saloon.

I can not agree with or support this program.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, Senate Joint Resolution 211 was submitted to the House to-day under suspension of the rules which limits time for debate to 20 minutes on each side, prohibiting all amendments. It is to be regretted that a question of national interest, of such grave importance to the Nation, should be submitted under such a drastic rule as to prohibit amendments and discussion.

But the liquor interests of the country do not want discussion or publicity. Ever since this session convened they have been demanding immediate action. With great éclat and spectacular announcement a resubmission resolution was submitted to the House on the first day of this session. It was given priority over all other imperative measures awaiting action, and now, when the matter is again considered, the same arbitrary rule is invoked. I therefore am compelled to extend my remarks in the RECORD, that it may show my position upon this question.

The resolution reads:

That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States:

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Under Article V of the Constitution, Congress is authorized to propose amendments to the Constitution by two-thirds vote of both Houses and when proposed and ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress, then such amendment becomes a part of the Constitution. The same power of proposing amendments is reserved by the several States upon application of the State legislatures of two-thirds of the several States.

Under Article V cited, Congress may propose a resolution either to the legislatures of the several States or to State conventions. Its power is limited to that of proposing the resolution and to the designation of the agency as the State legislature or the convention, whichever it may select. The power of Congress thus ends with such proposals. It remains for the States, through their legislatures to determine, first, whether action shall be taken upon such proposal; and second, whether such action shall be one of approval or disapproval.

The resolution, having been passed by two-thirds majority of Congress, will now be submitted to the several States for their disposition.

The first section of the resolution provides for the naked repeal of the amendment. If the resolution is approved by three-fourths of the States, it will be the first instance of a repeal of an amendment to the Constitution in the history of our country.

Any thirteen States may defeat the proposal: First, by refusing to call a convention; and second, by refusing to approve the resolution should a convention be called.

Section 2 prohibits the transportation or importation of intoxicating liquors for delivery or use into any of the several States where the laws of the States prohibit such. This section, it is claimed, will protect the dry States. If the resolution is adopted and intoxicating liquors are again legalized, section 2 will prove unavailing in protecting the dry States. Bootlegging from the wet States into the dry States will be increased tenfold. In this modern period of transportation by automobiles, trucks, and planes, an ample supply will always be available, and the States will be helpless to enforce their dry laws and ultimately will be compelled to repeal them.

Section 3 requires ratification by conventions in the several States. This is the first requirement for submission to State conventions that has been enacted in our history. There is a general impression that the conventions referred to will be similar to the old-time State political conventions and subject to all the political manipulations in the way of packing caucuses, trading votes, and so forth. But the conventions required will be an altogether different type of State agency. It will be a convention created by law, enacted by the State legislature, clothed with the same degree of solemnity and sanctity of law as State constitutional conventions. The State legislatures will fix the time and place of holding the conventions, the number of delegates, the apportionment of delegates, the qualifications of delegates, and the voters. It perhaps would utilize the election laws of the State as far as applicable in the selection of delegates and the adoption of the procedure in their selection.

At the present time there are 43 State legislatures in session. A desperate drive will be made to secure favorable action by at least 36 States calling State conventions before their legislatures adjourn. The wets are already organized to make this drive. They are amply supplied with money to pay the necessary expenses, and in doubtful States organization and money will determine the result of the conventions and may ultimately determine the issue of repeal.

It remains to be seen whether or not the people of the dry States will awaken in time to face the impending crisis now confronting them. Will they permit economic conditions to control their action? The strategy of the wets is to politicalize the depression to repeal the amendment. They claim the Government is in desperate straits financially, which is true; that unless additional revenues are provided for, its credit will be impaired and such impairment will affect financial conditions throughout the country; that the repeal of the amendment and the legalization of the manufacture and sale of beer and intoxicating liquors will give the Government $150,000,000 additional revenue annually, and, second, such manufacture will furnish a market for farm grains and relieve the present distressed condition of the farmers. In this respect, it is hoped to make economic conditions control the moral conditions and determine the issue involved.

It is to be regretted that the House majority, through its leadership, should entertain even for a moment the submission of such a grave constitutional question affecting the morals of our people at such a time, and should lend a willing ear to the importunities, pleadings, and seductive influences of the bloated brewers and distillers of the country and give them prior and preferential consideration over the interests of the impoverished farmers and the millions of unemployed! It is to be regretted that such a proposal should even be entertained for a moment, let alone be considered and pushed through by caucus regulations to enactment, at a time when industries are closed; laboring men out of employment for want of work; when they are in bread lines for want of sufficient means to purchase food; at a time when the great industry of agriculture has collapsed; when the prices of farm products will not pay 50 per cent of the cost of their production; when farmers can not pay their taxes, interest, and mortgages, or purchase the bare necessities of life; when they are being sold out by the sheriff or compelled to resist such sales by physical force at the courthouses in order to save their homes; when business men are forced to the wall, into bankruptcy; when the banks are closed and are being closed every day and deposits tied up; at a time when there is no purchasing power in the hands of the producers and workers and the charitable institutions have exhausted their resources in feeding the hungry; that in the very midst of this cataclysm of economic conditions, without precedent, the demands of the brewing and liquor interests should be given right of way, prior, preferential, and favorable consideration at a time when the producers and the workers, out of employment through no fault of their own, are in need of every penny to buy milk and food for their children!

Why should the brewing and liquor interests be given such consideration? Have they been filling the lobbies in the committee rooms for charitable purposes, to relieve the hungry and unemployed and the homeless farmers ejected from their premises? They are interested in this legislation solely for the profits they can make out of the business. At a time when the law-abiding people are not even thinking of profits, the liquor interests will not only continuously demand their profits but their tolls as well, in all directions, to control legislation. They will debauch the politics of the country and insist upon exercising the political influences to elect the sheriffs, the prosecuting attorneys, the members of the State legislatures, and of Congress. And yet we are told that a repeal of the law is necessary in order to secure law and order. If these criminal selfish interests will violate the law in one instance, what is to prevent them from doing so in the other?

This has been a sad day for the people of this country. Our standards have been lowered. The Christian citizenship of the country has been humiliated and the roll call just taken should have been accomplished by cathedral-bell solemnity in the presence of such a great tragedy.

We voted against the resolution because it affords no adequate protection to the dry States; it affords no adequate safeguards against the return of the open saloon; because bread-and-butter legislation for the millions of the unemployed now in the bread lines and the impoverished farmers now being evicted from their homes is of far greater importance than beer and liquor legislation for the profit of the brewers and distillers. The money to be spent in the consumption of beer and liquor is needed for bread and butter for the hungry and for homes for the homeless.

To thrust the consideration of this controversial question into the public mind already distracted with the grave questions of sustenance will contribute nothing to the stabilization of public opinion and the abiding peace and security of our country. Conditions already are menacing, are revolutionary, calling for the exercise of the highest degree of self-restraint, calm, considerate judgment, and the economic utilization of every penny to secure the necessaries of life. The adoption of this resolution, without the enactment of necessary legislation by the States, will but encourage increased flagrant violations of law.

The submission of repeal, with adequate safeguards, under normal conditions might have been justified. The question could then have been determined upon its merits, uninfluenced by the prevailing economic conditions. The adoption of this amendment will be the beginning of the end and it will only be a question of time when the prohibitory laws of the dry States will be nullified and repealed.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, debate on the resolution repealing the eighteenth amendment being limited to one or two minute speeches, obviously too short a time to discuss the subject, I want to briefly present my views in the general leave given for extension of remarks.

Nearly simultaneously with the passage of the eighteenth amendment the people of the State of Maryland, whom I am happy to represent as one of their Congressmen, rose up in revolt and advocated the immediate repeal and restoration to the States of that power which had been taken from them by the eighteenth amendment. At that time I had just returned from overseas service during the World War and, not having been given an opportunity to participate in the vote which Maryland cast on the eighteenth amendment, I immediately aligned myself with those in opposition to that theory of governmental encroachment and activity, and from that date to this I have been active in my campaign promises and in my previous votes to bring about the enactment of legislation similar to that which passed the House to-day.

It is therefore my happy privilege to be able to not only vote my individual sentiment and views on the subject but to express what I have long since interpreted to be the will and desire of the people of Maryland, that this cancer in the Constitution of our country be removed without any trace of its malignancy remaining, and to restore as nearly as possible the Constitution to those fundamentals of government to which I believe our forefathers intended it to be limited.

It will interest the House to know briefly the history of the prohibition amendment and the change in attitude of Congress since 1917 to the present time toward that law.

On August 1, 1917, the Senate voted to submit the eighteenth amendment, and the vote was 65 for and 20 against, with 11 not voting.

On December 17 of the same year the House voted to submit the prohibition amendment with a vote of 287 for and 100 against, with 40 not voting. It will be noted that this vote numerically closely approaches the vote of the House to-day for repeal.

On January 16, 1919, Nebraska became the thirty-sixth State to ratify the amendment, and a few days later the adoption of the said amendment was proclaimed, and it became operative on January 16, 1920.

On July 22, 1919, the House passed the national prohibition act—the Volstead Act—with a vote of 287 for and 100 against.

On September 4, 1919, the Senate passed the same legislation without a record vote. On October 27, 1919, President Wilson vetoed the Volstead Act, and on the same day the House overrode President Wilson's veto by a vote of 175 to 55, with 198 Members not voting; and on the following day the Senate also overrode the veto.

The legality of the Volstead Act was immediately challenged, and on June 7, 1920, its validity was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In 1921 antibeer legislation was passed by Congress, but not until 1928 was there any record vote reflecting the attitude of Congress for the prohibition amendment. On February 15 of that year the House voted on the Linthicum amendment to prohibit enforcement appropriation and forbidding the poisoning of industrial alcohol. I was one of the 61 voting for that amendment, but there were 283 votes against it, and the House therefore refused even this sensible interference with the existing law, and seemingly were unwilling to submit to any change whatsoever.

In 1929 a semblance of a test appeared in the vote of the House on the $24,000,000 enforcement appropriation with a record vote of 244 for and 141 against. The following month, February, 1929, the Senate and the House voted for the Jones five and ten law, the Senate vote being 64 for and 18 against, while the House vote was 284 for and 90 against. In each of the foregoing instances it was my privilege to vote in the negative.

It can be seen from the foregoing period of 12 years, aside from additional and more drastic dry laws, no vote of the House or Senate looking to repeal or modification had become a matter of record. I returned to Congress in 1921, succeeding as I did my dry predecessor, who represented the Second Congressional District of Maryland, or, I might say, misrepresented it, so far as the attitude of his people upon this important question was concerned, and not until March 1, 1932, were we able to bring a wet-and-dry issue to the floor of the House. One hundred and forty-five signatures were obtained on that day to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of the Beck-Linthicum resolution for repeal. On March 14 the House voted, 169 for and 228 against this discharge rule, but from that day on those of us who made up the 169 realized that the end of the eighteenth amendment was not far distant. We forced another vote at a later date on the beer bill, which was also defeated 169 to 228.

All of the agitation throughout the country and the change of sentiment as reflected in the votes of Congress brought for the first time an expression in the platforms of the Republican and Democratic Conventions, advocating in general terms what the resolution of to-day puts into legal form and effect. When the present short session of Congress convened in December I was in sympathy with the decision of Speaker Garner to force a vote upon the repeal resolution and while that vote of 272 for and 141 against was short of six votes only to gain it the required two-thirds, and, therefore, pass it, I believe this overwhelming sentiment furnished the necessary encouragement to the Senate for the action of that body which followed on February 16, 1933, when the resolution received the necessary two-thirds, the vote being 63 for and 23 against, and also furnished the necessary encouragement for the caucus action of the two major parties in the House and the culmination of all that effort in the success of it's being passed when 289 Members voted for and 121 Members against the resolution.

I have cited the foregoing brief recapitulation of record votes to show first how determined Congress was 13 years ago to do an unwise thing and yet how responsive the same lawmaking body of our Government has been to the popular demand of our people.

Almost immediately after the passage of the eighteenth amendment the lawless element of our country took advantage of the disrespect and disregard for this sumptuary law and steadily and to an alarming extent bootleggers, racketeers, demagogues, and criminals of every conceivable character flooded our courts, debased the sanctity of our laws, invaded territories in our country theretofore protected by local option and in general presented a most disgusting and humiliating condition for a country enjoying the traditions that ours does to tolerate. It was perfectly inevitable that the best thinking people of the country would demand a change and it is not surprising to find the great Democratic Party being the first political organization in its national platform taking a definite, open, easily understandable position in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the submission of that great question to the people of the States of the Union.

The Democratic platform of 1932, under which President-elect Roosevelt ran for the Presidency, said:

> We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal. We urge the enactment of such measures by the several States as will actually promote temperance, effectively prevent the return of the saloon, and bring the liquor traffic into the open under complete supervision and control by the States.

Twenty-one million of our people rallied to the support of the Democratic candidate, and I am quite sure this unprecedented vote was due very largely to the desire and the feeling of certainty they had that if the Democratic Party was given control of the Government, one of the first actions of the administration would be the redemption of this pledge.

It is a source of real satisfaction, therefore, to find the present Congress, controlled absolutely by the Democratic Party in the House and almost having a majority in the Senate, not waiting for the Seventy-third Congress to convene but as loyal Democrats, sensing the sentiment of the people of this country and the platform upon which many of them had been reelected, to vote immediately in the present Congress this important change in our organic law.

In these troublesome times it will go far to restore confidence in Congress and in our people.

The foregoing has not alone presented the reasons for this change in sentiment. The overburdened tax-paying people of our country know that prohibition has not been, and can not be, enforced, and yet we have contributed to date approximately $6,000,000,000, or about one-third of the total national debt, in attempting to enforce this law. Our United States courts, which should be devoting their time to serious and important litigation, are clogged with cases of picayune character because of this law.

Taxes collected on liquor in 1919 would have paid one-half of the huge deficit of this country in 1931.

Without reflecting in any way upon the ability of the legislators of my own State and the other States, the set-up of convention machinery, as the resolution calls for, and I am sure this thought will be of use and value to those serving in the legislatures of our States at the present time. Take Maryland, for instance; in the election of November 8, 1932, Governor Roosevelt received an overwhelming majority, as well as Senator TYDINGS and the six Democratic Members of the House. Maryland has a total population of 1,600,000, of which number 470,000 reside in my congressional district. Of the majority received by President-elect Roosevelt in Maryland, approximately one-third was given by the congressional district I represent, and yet the Eastern Shore of Maryland is said to be dry, if we look at the vote of my able and distinguished colleague who represents that district. If that be true, then any convention assembled in Maryland should reflect the popular will of the State as a whole, and not on the basis of representation therein, such as our legislature is made up of at the present time. I mean by this that while the existing representation of the counties and cities might be advisable for certain purposes, the problem we are now dealing with—that is, to change the Constitution of our Government—is a broad, state-wide question, and one in which popular sentiment should prevail and control. I hope, therefore, that not only my own great State, a pioneer in advocating this victory which has come to the country to-day, so far as Congress is concerned, will set up at a very early date, through enactment by the present legislature now in session, a model bill for the calling of a convention to pass on this resolution, and one that will appeal to other States of the Union because of the assurance it will give to the great masses of our people where the popular sentiment and feeling of the people will prevail against any idiotic and asinine schedule of representation where county lines or city lines might, as a result of existing law, otherwise dictate.

I feel that the vote I have cast on this resolution to-day interprets the desire of the people of the great district I represent, and I am happy to report in this way it has been my privilege to voice their sentiments and their feelings against the eighteenth amendment in the vote I have cast for its repeal. I believe I am promoting temperance in changing present conditions, because I have confidence in my own State when the eighteenth amendment is repealed to see to it in the expression it gives to the prerogative of the State in permitting the sale, manufacture, and use of intoxicating liquors to protect those parts of Maryland which want to be dry, and to control those parts which want to be wet in a way that will restore the respect and confidence of our people in the existing law.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I vote "aye," because I believe the American people have the right to decide this question for themselves.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, in the brief one and two minute speeches permitted under the exceedingly limited time allowed for debate, the outstanding arguments of the opponents of this resolution were predicated upon four grounds:

First. That the eighteenth amendment is a good thing.

Second. That its repeal would bring back the saloon.

Third. That Members believing in prohibition would stultify themselves if they voted to permit the people of the sovereign States to express their views on the subject.

Fourth. That the passage of this resolution would pave the way for Federal legislation dictating to the sovereign States the times, places, and procedures of holding the State conventions.

It would be vain to rehash the arguments of the last 13 years. Suffice it to say that the people have spoken. The verdict of the last election, in which both the great parties stood for submission of the subject to conventions to be held in the separate States, indicates quite clearly that the voters of the country now realize that the eighteenth amendment has not been the success that was anticipated.

"A COSTLY AND UNPROFITABLE EXPERIMENT"

Mingled, no doubt, with that conclusion it is evident that the people of this country have come to realize that prohibition by force is now about proven to have been a very costly and unprofitable experiment.

It has deprived the United States Treasury of excise revenues of over half a billion dollars a year for 13 years—aggregating six and one-half billion dollars—besides entailing interminable expenditures for enforcement—increased courts, penitentiaries, judges, clerks, and enforcement officers. Added to that, and this is no negligible factor, has come the expense of making arrests for prohibition enforcement of from fifty to one hundred thousand persons a year, with all of the charges for maintenance and costs incidental thereto.

SOCIAL AND MORAL DEGRADATION

With this picture of the mere material costs of prohibition, in addition to the social and moral degradation ensuing in its wake, it is not surprising that the American people have begun to suspect that the abortive attempt at prohibition enforcement is largely responsible for the present deficit in the Treasury and the mountainous taxes which are now piled up on the backs of our suffering taxpayers.

THE PEOPLE SHOULD HAVE THE RIGHT TO VOTE ON IT

Be that as it may, the proposition that confronts us to-day in voting on this resolution is whether or not the American people should have the opportunity to express their convictions with finality on the subject by the lawful constitutional method provided by the fifth article of the Constitution, instead of being compelled to resort to newspaper and magazine straw votes, to find out what ought to be done about it.

That is all there is to this resolution. A vote for it is neither a vote for the eighteenth amendment nor a vote against it.

The text of the resolution does not touch on the merits of the question, nor bind any Member as to his ultimate individual action. If he votes for this resolution, he may go back to his constituency and fight as hard as he likes against repeal. No one can challenge him. No honest dry at home can blame him for his action here; no honest wet here can blame him for his action there.

But, on the other hand, a vote against this resolution is a virtual annulment of the fifth article of the Constitution itself, which grants the right of submission of any proposal when there is an obvious popular demand for it.

A vote against this resolution is an arbitrary denial of justice evincing a desire, at any cost, to keep the people bound forever in the shackles of a law against which there has rolled up an almost universal wave of condemnation.

Those who take this stand of refusing to put their convictions to the test of popular approval confess their own weakness and their fear of defeat.

THE RETURN OF THE SALOON

Fears about the return of the saloon are utterly unfounded. No State can have saloons within its confines unless it wants them. If it does want them, that is the business and sole concern of the people of that State. Even at that, impartial opinion is now unanimous that the worst saloon is better than the best speakeasy, with its attendant train of bootleggers, thieves, cutthroats, and racketeers.

Take the case of Maine, which to-day was referred to as a model State in paving the way for total abstinence by force. Does anyone believe that there is such a thing as real total abstinence in Maine? If he does, his innocence is amusing. Prohibition has only been maintained—or the semblance of it maintained—in Maine by the most degrading connivance between the prohibition forces and the police and the owners of the thousands of speakeasies. The officials simply ignore the existence of the speakeasy for 364 days in the year. Then, as collection day comes round, the places are raided and the owners fined $1,000 or thereabouts, which is the equivalent of what would be an annual license fee in a self-respecting and decent state of affairs. Having paid his fine, the owner goes back to his blind tiger and resumes business as usual. No, my friends, do not talk about Maine as an example—except as one that ought not to be emulated or perpetuated.

AS TO THE CONVENTIONS

The sole remaining alibi for voting against the pending resolution is that its passage will open the way for congressional interference with the times, places, and procedures of holding the conventions. There is no merit in that excuse. The resolution is carefully worded to avoid that very pitfall. Its very brevity is its safeguard and recommendation. It leaves the initiative to the States to act upon it of their own volition.

The Constitution itself was ratified by conventions in the individual States, without either molestation or dictation by the Continental Congress and without the suggestion of financial aid or pressure of any kind. The States to-day can be safely relied upon to follow this precedent.

The language of the resolution is perfect in its simplicity and gives the largest measure of latitude to the States in holding the conventions as to times, places, and procedures.

There will be no justification for Congress to meddle with their sovereign freedom. There is no need to. The wet States will be only too anxious, if anything, to start the conventions moving in order to win. In like manner, the dry States will not be less diligent in striving hard not to lose. It is a fair issue which should be left to the people of the country to decide, as is their sole right and province.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, nothing will do more at this time to restore prosperity and to renew confidence in the American Congress than the passage of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment resolution to-day.

Congress has never suffered a more violent barrage of abuse and criticism in its history than during recent months. Representative government has been under attack and suspicion as never before. Nothing Congress could do in counterattack could be more effective than to pass promptly this repeal resolution.

Whether rightfully or not, the majority of the American people have a firm and ever-growing conviction that the repeal of the eighteenth amendment will speed the return of prosperity more quickly than anything else.

First. The people look forward to increased employment in the brewery business and all its accessories and ramifications of business. They anticipate the employment of hundreds of thousands of additional workingmen.

Second. They anticipate the release of millions of dollars of capital in the tremendous purchasing power of raw materials and equipment and tremendous investment in transportation.

Third. They anticipate the lessening of crime and the destruction of gangs of gunmen and racketeers. This means less public expense in maintaining law-enforcing agencies, such as patrolmen, detectives, courts, jails, and so forth.

Fourth. Tremendous deficits have grown up in every branch of Government and additional revenue is absolutely necessary. The people are clamoring for the hundreds of millions of dollars revenue to be gained from the taxation of beer, wine, liquor, and so forth.

These are only a few of the reasons why the people are convinced that the eighteenth amendment is an overwhelming failure. They gave their mandate for its repeal by an overwhelming vote in last November's elections. Our Government is a failure if it does not register the people's wishes in this matter.

I have every confidence that the States will speed ratification after to-day's vote. When the Senate passed the repeal resolution, I promptly telegraphed wet leaders in Michigan, and Michigan is now exerting itself to win the honor of being the first State in the Union to ratify the repeal.

This is one of the happiest days of my life, for I have devoted many years to prevent the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, and I have also fought aggressively and persistently for many years to secure the repeal of this dreadful law.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, under general leave to extend remarks upon the motion made in the House Monday, February 20, to suspend the rules and to pass Senate Joint Resolution 211, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, I submit some of the considerations which have induced me to vote for this resolution.

This proposed amendment to the Constitution is, in fact, a proposal to repeal the eighteenth amendment, but also to give a constitutional guarantee that the transportation or importation into any State of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws of such State, shall be prohibited forever. If 36 States should act in favor of ratifying this proposed amendment, then, undoubtedly, each and every State in the Union could be just as dry as its own laws make it and as its own courts and juries make it.

The Democratic platform adopted at Chicago in 1932, on which Roosevelt was elected President and on which I was elected to Congress on November 8, 1932, binds the Democratic Party to submit to the States a proposal for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. I am a Democrat by tradition, by inheritance, by association, and by conviction. I have always been a Democrat, and I expect to remain one as long as I live. Of course, the Democratic Party in the past has made mistakes and probably will make mistakes in the future. But however numerous and serious its mistakes may be, they have been, and are, and will be, less numerous and less serious than the mistakes of the Republican Party. There is no other major party before the American public, and the warnings of history do not encourage us to contemplate the organization of a new party. Hence, my resolution to remain a Democrat is well grounded in reason and conviction, and I expect to remain a Democrat as long as there is breath in my body.

Before the campaign for the nomination by the Democratic primary in South Carolina was closed, the National Democratic Convention had met in Chicago, and had adopted the platform to which I refer, and had nominated Roosevelt for President, and he had appeared before the convention and had expressed his personal resolution to stand upon that platform, and to seek to carry out its policies, if he should be elected. In like manner, during my campaign for renomination by the Democrats of the fourth congressional district, I declared that I stood upon that platform from beginning to end. Being a Democrat, I do not consider myself at liberty to pick and choose those parts of the platform that I approve and will support. If I can reject one plank in the platform, and still be a Democrat, I could reject two such planks, and finally could reject 99 per cent of the principles and policies declared for in that platform, and still be a Democrat. Such a conclusion is logically preposterous. A man is not obliged to be a Democrat, and if he is a Democrat, he is not obliged to be a candidate for office upon a Democratic platform, but if he chooses to be a Democratic candidate, then I submit that good faith compels him to accept the platform as a solemn obligation to the people. If, after the platform was formulated, I could not conscientiously support its principles, then it would have been my duty to myself and to my political friends to have declined to be a candidate.

I have been surprised, therefore, that some of my personal friends have urged that I am not bound by the Democratic platform to support the resolution to submit to the States a proposal to repeal the eighteenth amendment. If I am not bound by that specific pledge of the Democratic platform, then I am not bound by any other pledge in that platform. Those who advocate repudiation of a part of a platform should remember that such a principle would lead to the repudiation of the entire platform. Furthermore, unless there be such a thing as political honor and political integrity, evidenced by the support of a party platform, then party government and popular government are doomed to failure. Unless the people have some assurance that their representatives will keep their pledges made during a campaign, then they will lose confidence in representative government; and when confidence fails, the government itself will fail.

Furthermore, those who advocate the repudiation of a part of the platform, by the same token advocate party perfidy and political treason. If a candidate is not bound by the party platform, written with deliberation and adopted by the representatives of the party in convention assembled, then a candidate would not be bound and should not be bound by his public speeches and private conversations during a campaign. If a candidate for office should during a campaign by his speeches promise the people that he would vote for the revision of the tariff, and if, after election, he should refuse to vote as he told the people he would, then the people would have a right to denounce him as a traitor and to spurn him from their confidence and party councils. Even more so should the people repudiate a Representative who refuses to abide by the solemn platform pledges upon which he was elected to office.

MY SPECIFIC PLEDGE AS DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

But as for myself, I signed a pledge, required by the party rules of South Carolina, binding me specifically, if elected to Congress, to support the policies and principles of the Democratic Party, and to act in cooperation with my colleagues in Congress in furtherance of same. The history of this pledge and its fair and reasonable interpretation show that reference is made to the principles and policies of the National Democratic Party, and those principles and policies are to be found expressed in the latest National Democratic platform. It would be idle and absurd to seek to bind the Representatives from South Carolina to cooperate with their Democratic colleagues from other States in promoting the principles set out in the Democratic platform of the State of South Carolina, or of the State of Georgia, or of the State of Tennessee, or of the State of Texas. Undoubtedly, the purpose and intention of that pledge is to bind the Democratic Members of Congress from South Carolina to support the principles and policies of the National Democratic Party as expressed in the National Democratic platform.

TO AMEND IS TRUE AMERICANISM

Feeling that I am honor bound by the foregoing considerations to submit to the States the question of repealing the eighteenth amendment, I have voted so to do. This proposal is not radical, nor un-American. In fact, it is the very essence of Americanism. It is the taproot of democratic institutions. It is the heart and soul of the republican form of government. The people are the masters in America. The people have adopted the Constitution of the United States in conventions assembled, and the people have already ratified 20 amendments to that Constitution. If the Constitution should never be changed then the eighteenth amendment could never have been adopted. Members of Congress at that time voted to submit to the States a proposal which became known as the eighteenth amendment. If I had been in Congress at the time I would have voted to give the people of the States the chance to say whether or not they desired to confer on Congress this police power of regulating the manufacture, sale, and distribution of alcoholic beverages.

The people of the States have been living under the law passed in pursuance of the eighteenth amendment, and dissatisfaction therewith has been widespread enough to cause both major political parties to declare in favor of a change. These two political parties represent, as shown by the vote, over 95 per cent of the people of America. The popular vote cast in favor of the prohibition candidate and his platform was almost negligible. The difference between the Democratic and the Republican platforms on this question is well-nigh infinitesimal. The proposal which has now been submitted to the States by the action of the House of Representatives to-day, contains the essence of the platforms of both parties on that subject. It is true that the Democratic platform declared that there should be out and out repeal, and the Republican platform declared that there should be repeal, but reserved to the Federal Government the power to prevent the return of the saloons in any part of the Nation.

The proposal voted on to-day gives to every State absolute power to control the manufacture, sale, and transportation of alcoholic and intoxicating beverages. It will be up to the people of every State to say whether or not they will permit any intoxicating beverages to be sold or transported or stored in each such State, and if they, by their State laws, prohibit such manufacture, sale, and transportation within the State, then, such State laws will be supreme on that question, and whiskies can not be shipped into, or transported into such State; and, if laws prohibiting such importation and transportation of intoxicating beverages are violated by common carriers, or by private individuals, then State courts, and State juries must try, and convict, and punish all such violations.

EACH STATE'S WILL SUPREME IN MAKING AND ENFORCING LAWS

In other words, if 36 States should ratify this proposed amendment, then the fight will be transferred from Congress to the legislatures in each State to say what the law of that State shall be. If the law of South Carolina remains as it now is, then there is no danger whatsoever that liquor will be sold or transported into, or manufactured in, South Carolina. If South Carolina will look after her own problems along this line, and I know she did it well before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, and if Georgia will do the same, and if North Carolina will do the same, and if the other States of the Union do the same, then there will be much less intoxicating beverages made and sold and transported than is the case now. A law of this kind can be best supported by the people of the State enacting that law. So long as it was possible to throw the expense and responsibility upon the shoulders of the Federal Government, then the State governments let their own laws remain in a state of quasi abeyance.

FEDERAL CALL AND CONTROL OF CONVENTIONS REVOLUTIONARY AND DANGEROUS

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to record, as I did in December, my solemn conviction that any attempt by the Congress of the United States to enact a law for the calling of conventions in all the States, to meet at the same time, and to be subject to the same Federal regulations concerning membership, and all the other qualifications for voting for delegates, would be unconstitutional, un-American, undemocratic, and unwise. My conviction is perfectly clear that the Congress has no power, either express or implied, to call a single convention of the sovereign people of a single State, to pass upon any question, whether it be the ratification of a proposed amendment to the Constitution or anything else. To grant such a power would be the most dangerous step in the destruction of our dual system of government that the human mind could conceive. To grant the power proposed by the Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, and some others, would make it possible for a party in power and in control of the Federal Government, to work its own will in the uprooting of, and destruction of, those things that are most fundamental to American life and American institutions.

There has been no more radical and revolutionary and dangerous proposal made since the days of reconstruction following the War between the States. If such a proposal ever finds expression in the form of a bill introduced in Congress, then I pledge myself to exert every ounce of my strength, both physical and mental, to defeating that proposal in the most summary and decisive manner. The very suggestion itself is repugnant to the principles of any person grounded in the doctrine of States' rights. The justification for any such proposal is rested upon a few fugitive and unimportant dicta of the Supreme Court. Being familiar with the history of that court and having studied its doctrines and decisions for 40 years, I feel that if a majority of both Houses of Congress could ever be induced to vote for any such proposal, and if any American citizen, sitting in the chair of President, could ever be prevailed upon to sign his approval to any such bill, then an appeal to the courts to test the constitutionality of such a proposed law would meet with the prompt and unanimous declaration of all the courts of the land that the same is unconstitutional, null and void.

If ever the power and right of the courts to declare an act of Congress to be unconstitutional, and therefore null and void, is justified, then the case now under consideration would be the most thoroughly justified of all cases that have ever been considered. The reason is that it is the solemn duty of the Supreme Court to preserve not only our Constitution but to preserve our constitutional system. It is the duty of the Supreme Court not only to declare and protect the rights of the Federal Government but to declare and protect the rights of the States. If the rights of the States are invaded, and if by reason of such invasion the rights of the States are ultimately destroyed, by the same act the Federal Government would be destroyed. It would cease to be a confederation, and would become a consolidated and single sovereign government.

The very argument advanced by the Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer in support of his plan whereby he suggests that if State legislatures are hostile to the contemplated amendment to the Constitution, then even if they call a State convention they may so fix the qualifications of those who are to vote and of those who are to be elected delegates, and the number of delegates, and the districts from which delegates may be selected, and the time and place of meeting, and all the other details of such a convention, as to completely defeat and overthrow the effort to amend the Constitution.

I admit that it is true. To grant the existence of a power is to grant the possibility of abusing that power. The power to do right in a sovereign way involves the power to do wrong. The power in a legislature to enact good laws of necessity involves the power to enact bad laws. By the same argument, but with multiplied danger to our dual system of government, to admit the power of the Federal Government to call conventions in States and to fix the qualifications for those who vote and to fix the qualifications of delegates and to prescribe the territory to be represented and to fix the time and the places of election and the time and places for the meeting of the convention would be to admit the existence of a power in the Federal Government which might be exercised at any time, whereby amendments might be railroaded through and adopted that would destroy our whole plan of government in America. To concentrate such a power into the hands of the single Federal Government would give to that Government the power of destroying America herself. But to distribute that power among the people of 48 States is in the interest of safety and wisdom. While a few States might abuse their power, it is not likely that 36 States would at the same time abuse their power to the extent of ratifying an amendment to the Constitution which would pervert and destroy the beauty and symmetry of the system.

For these considerations I hope that no effort will be made to enact any such law, but if such an effort is made, I pledge all that I can do to its swift and overwhelming defeat.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the Congress, when it provided that the proposed twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States should be ratified by conventions to be held in the several States, thereby expressed its desire that all of our citizens should have an equal opportunity to be heard individually on this all-absorbing question.

Since the passage of the resolution there has been much comment on the manner in which this might be accomplished. Many contend that the Congress of the United States has authority to and should set up the machinery for calling these conventions. The consensus of opinion, however, seems to be that the framers of our Constitution, in recognition of the sovereignity of the States, intended that the calling of the convention should be purely a State function. I am of this belief, for the reason that to hold otherwise would be contrary to the spirit of our Federal Constitution and might result in a usurpation by the Congress of certain vested rights retained by the States at the time the Constitution was originally adopted.

There has been much discussion of the manner in which these conventions might be called by the several States. Having in mind the intent of Congress that all of our citizens should have an equal opportunity to voice their desires, and having in mind also the numerous suggestions which have been made in each of the States as to the form the legislation should take, I have evolved a plan embodying a method of procedure which I believe will carry out the intent of Congress, and which is also expeditious and easily comprehended. It is suggestive only, and may be so modified as to coincide with the election machinery of the several States. The plan in substance contemplates the nomination and election of a small body of delegates and carries out the principle of the so-called electoral college. Legislation may be enacted by the several State legislatures providing for the following:

First. The purpose of the convention.

Second. The time and place of holding the convention; the time and manner of holding primary and general elections, which may be in conformity with existing law.

Third. That the convention shall consist of a number of delegates equal to the number of congressional districts within the State. Where there are too few congressional districts to make this advisable, a stated number of delegates may be elected at large, or a delegate may be elected from each State senatorial or representative district, or more than one from each such congressional, senatorial, or representative district if it is thought advisable to increase the number of delegates.

Fourth. That one delegate be nominated on each side of the question from each congressional district, but who shall be elected at large, as hereinafter provided.

Fifth. That each person desiring to be nominated in each district shall file with the secretary of state, previous to circulating nominating petitions, an affidavit substantially as follows:

I, ———, being duly sworn, depose and say that I reside at ———; that I am a citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years and upwards, and am a qualified elector of the county of ——— in said State. That I am a candidate for nomination to the office of delegate to a convention to convene on ———, in the city of ———, State of ———, for the purpose of considering the ratification of the proposed twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States; that if elected to said office I will vote in said convention for (against) the ratification of said amendment.

Sixth. That each person so desiring to be nominated shall file with the secretary of state, after the filing of such affidavit and before a specified date, a nominating petition signed by a number of electors to be designated, in substantially the following form:

We, the undersigned, qualified electors of the township (city) of ———, county of ———, State of ———, hereby nominate ——— of ———, county of ———, State of ———, as a candidate for the office of delegate to a convention to be held at the city of ———, in said State, on ———, for the purpose of considering the ratification of the proposed twenty-first article of the Constitution of the United States; that it has been represented to us that ——— has heretofore filed with the secretary of state an affidavit declaring that if nominated and elected to said office he will vote for (against) the ratification of said amendment.

These nominating petitions may be filed with the secretary of state before a specified date preliminary to the printing of the name of such candidate on the primary ballot. In lieu of a number of signatures of electors, provision may be made for the filing of a fee. It may be also provided that where only one person files on either side of the question from such district, he shall be certified by the secretary of state as the nominee, and in this event no primary election will be necessary.

Seventh. That the primary ballot be arranged in columns; one column to be headed "For ratification," and the other column to be headed "Against ratification." In their respective columns should be listed the names of those who have qualified by filing the affidavit and petition; the names of those having declared that they will vote for ratification will be listed in the column under such heading; likewise, the names of those who have by their affidavit and petitions declared their intention to vote against ratification will be listed in that column. Squares should appear opposite the names of such candidates in which the elector may declare his preference. In casting his ballot the elector may vote for one candidate in each column, and the person receiving the highest number of votes on each side of the question shall be certified as the nominee on that side of the question by the secretary of state.

Eighth. The election ballot may be prepared in like form, except that these persons nominated in the manner provided shall become one of a group of as many delegates as there are congressional districts. The elector when casting his ballot in the general election will vote for all of those persons designated as nominees in the column wherein his desires are expressed. For example: In States having 17 congressional districts, 17 individuals will be nominated on each side of the question as delegates to the convention, and their names will all appear on the ballot under respective headings, the same as the names of presidential electors now appear on ballots cast for the election of the President and Vice President. A person desiring to vote for ratification will vote for all of those who have been nominated under the column headed "For Ratification." Likewise, a person desiring to vote against ratification will vote for the 17 names under the heading "Against Ratification." That group of delegates so elected will receive certificates of election by the secretary of state and will organize and conduct the convention.

To avoid any question of personalities, the legislature may also provide that the form of the ballot to be submitted to the voter at the general election shall be in substantially the following form:

Shall the proposed twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which is as follows, be ratified:

The proposed amendment may be set forth in full on the ballot, with a provision for the elector to vote either "yes" or "no."

In this event the legislation must provide that an affirmative vote shall for all intents and purposes be deemed and construed as a vote for that group of nominees who have been nominated to vote for ratification; a negative vote will for all intents and purposes be deemed and construed as a vote for that group of nominees who have been nominated to vote against ratification. This plan is thought advisable because under it the voter will be casting his vote directly on the question, with all personalities eliminated.

The question will be raised as to whether this is constitutional. Let me observe that in the election of presidential electors in the election last November, many States had previously provided by law that the names of the candidates for President and Vice President be written on the ballot in lieu of the names of presidential electors, and that a vote for these candidates would, for all intents and purposes, be deemed and construed as a vote for the group of presidential electors named by the respective parties in their conventions or primaries.

Ninth. The legislation may also provide the manner of conducting the convention; the election of temporary and permanent officers; the manner of casting and recording the votes in the convention; and the manner in which the proceedings shall be recorded and certified to the secretary of state. The secretary of state then certifies the result of the convention in the manner now provided by law.

This plan, it will be seen, does not contemplate the election of delegates by districts. It provides that every qualified elector of any State shall be given an equal opportunity with every other elector to express himself on the question of ratification. It prevents gerrymandering and the possibility that minorities might control the conventions. It is to be hoped that these suggestions will be found helpful. The principle involved will at least meet with response from those who are conscientious in their belief that the people should be given an opportunity to directly solve the problem of prohibition, without interference by groups or minorities.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in voting for Senate Joint Resolution 211, submitting to the States the question of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, I adhered strictly to the position which I consistently have taken on this important subject over a period of years.

During the campaign last fall a representative of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform asked me to state my views on the question of repeal. I quote the following self-explanatory extracts from my reply to her:

During our interview this afternoon I also read you verbatim a report of remarks I made in Springfield under date of May 23, 1931, and which were printed in the Springfield Republican and Union the following day. I quote from these remarks as follows:

"As before stated, I voted to submit the question of adoption of the eighteenth amendment to the legislatures of the States because of the then preponderant sentiment of the people for such submission.

"In order to be consistent, if a similar preponderant sentiment is shown to exist for resubmission, I should deem it my duty to vote in Congress for such resubmission."

* * * * * * *

If reelected to Congress and the question comes before the House in the usual method of procedure, I shall vote for resubmission, preferably to State conventions called in accordance with constitutional provision.

As further evidence of my adherence to the position which I have publicly announced on various occasions, I call attention to the fact that in the first session of the Seventy-second Congress I voted "yea" on the following measures:

H. J. Res. 208. Proposed amendment to the Constitution to amend the eighteenth amendment. On motion to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 10017. To permit the manufacture and sale of beer, etc., of not more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by weight, and placing a tax thereon. On motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means.

During the second session of the Seventy-second Congress I voted "yea" on the following measures:

H. J. Res. 480. Proposing an amendment to the Constitution to repeal the eighteenth amendment.

H. R. 13742. To provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquors, and for other purposes.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, the Congress can only propose amendments to the Constitution. It is for the people to ratify or reject. The resolution just adopted submits the question of the retention or rejection of the eighteenth amendment to the people. It provides protection for dry territory. It provides for ratification by conventions. The Federal ban on saloons was dropped out by the Senate after full argument because it was found difficult of application. Prevention of the return of the saloon and its attendant evils is left to the States.

My platform for nomination and election has the approval, before announcement, of both friends and enemies of the eighteenth amendment as a fair and just proposition. It called for a submission of the question as follows:

The issue in respect to prohibition is: Shall the people have an opportunity to determine it by their votes?

I favor a prompt submission by the Congress of the question of the repeal or retention of the eighteenth amendment in such a way as to provide, as nearly as possible, a direct vote on that issue. It should be decided openly and decisively at the polls by the American people themselves. I prefer a straight direct vote, but that way is not now open. A properly framed convention plan is the best substitute.

The bootlegger and racketeers must be driven out of the country. In the event the people repeal the eighteenth amendment they should prevent the return of the saloon and its attendant evils.

The provisions of the resolution fairly meet the platform on which I was elected. I would not be entitled to the confidence of my constituents, whether wet or dry, if I went back on it.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am supported by an overwhelming majority of the electorate of Connecticut in voting to repeal the eighteenth amendment to our Constitution.

Connecticut in its longheadedness, its conservativeness, its allegiance to constitutional traditions—and Connecticut, as you know, created the first Constitution in America—was one of the very few States—two, I believe—to refuse to vote to enact the eighteenth amendment.

Ten years' prohibition experiment has brought disgrace to America, ruination of our youth, disregard for law and order, hard times, and a dangerous increase of criminal class and criminal wealth, so great and so dangerous as to menace the security and good name of our communities and our Government.

We welcome the chance to eliminate this eighteenth amendment conceived in misrepresentation as a supposed patriotic temporary war measure, by well-meaning but misguided citizens of our land.

Were I in doubt as to my personal convictions, and I am not, I would but turn to my party platform of the 1932 Chicago Democratic Convention which overwhelmingly elected President-elect Roosevelt and read:

We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal."

I answer that demand by not only voting for such plank, but state I would consider it a breach of party faith and good citizenship to vote otherwise.

I have little patience with the die-hard drys who talk of the peril of the saloon. The saloon under past State control, though perhaps undesirable, out of date, and likely not to be restored, was infinitely better than the present-day speak-easy. Prohibition technically abolished the saloon. It actually created the speak-easy. In my section of the United States, I feel safe in saying for every saloon existing before prohibition days there are one or two more speak-easies.

These establishments are unregulated in their thousands by any other form of government than the rule of the beer baron and the bribe or blindness of Government officials. They live through the utter inability of our Government to regulate, stop, or control same.

We have found we can not regulate by law the morals or tastes of our citizens. That is for the home, the church, the uplift, social, and religious organizations of the country, not the statute law of this or any land.

Any law that flouts our inherent constitutional rights and traditions, our country's ideals of freedom—the homely, crude standards of the mass of our people—can not be enforced. Any unenforcible law, though an apparently good law for the few, is the kind of law which creates lawlessness, crime, and anarchy; the sooner repealed the sooner order and peace are restored. I venture an opinion that this repeal, if carried through the House by a two-thirds vote, will be supported by nearly all the 48 States in conventions assembled; respect for law will be restored, business progress will be aided, and taxation reduced. It will be at least one step—and maybe one big step—in turning back the depression and bringing a more satisfied America again to work.

I feel that one of the strongest elements in this measure is the feature which gives to each State the right to regulate its own liquor traffic free from wet States' interference or so-called regulation by the present Government's discredited prohibition service. It will aid and protect the so-called dry States in permitting them to exclude, if their citizens so wish, all liquor traffic in their domains.

My State of Connecticut has no more speak-easies or illegal liquor traffic than any other State. We are one of the most law-abiding States in the Union. We desire real regulated State liquor traffic, a regulation of such a character as will come exclusively from the excise laws of Connecticut, and give opportunity to return to a higher standard of law and order than prevails in this country to-day.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why I can not conscientiously vote to repeal the eighteenth amendment and bring back the legalized barroom. I shall not now, at all, attempt to discuss all of them; I shall only mention one or two and make just a few observations. Feeling as I do about this matter, I would be a traitor to my conscience and to those who believe as I do if I voted for the return of the saloon—I would be acting a deliberate falsehood and not entitled to the respect or confidence of either those who honestly believe in the open barroom or those who are just as conscientious in their opposition to it.

The mighty drive is on for the return of the open barroom in every State, in every county, at every cross road, in every city and town, in every block, on every corner, open every day in the week every hour of the day, without the payment of license or tax—if possible—without restriction, and with the determination of this mighty political and financial force to dominate all local, State, and Federal Governments and to crush out the life of every one that opposes it.

No one who remembers the activities of the liquor interest before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment can question this now being the ultimate objective of the big whisky interest; neither can anyone who closely studies the fight now being waged in the country by this interest at all honestly doubt this now being their main objective. Long before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, the late Senator Thomas E. Watson of Georgia, in speaking of the liquor traffic said:

> It is a warrior whom no victory can satisfy, no ruin satiate. It pauses at no rubicon to consider, pitches no tents at nightfall, goes into no quarters for winter. It conquers amid the burning plains of the South, where the phalanx of Alexander halted in mutiny. It conquers amid the snowdrifts of the North, where the grand army of Napoleon found its winding sheet. Its monuments are in every burial ground. Its badges of triumph are the weeds which mourners wear. Its song of victory is the wail that was heard in Ramah: "Rachel crying for her children and weeping because they are not."
> It never buries the hatchet; its temple of Janus never closes its doors. No dove of peace ever carries its message; in its hand is never the olive branch. It sends no flag of truce and receives none, its wounded are left where they fall, and its dead bury their dead. Every citadel that it storms it devastates, and in every charge that it makes its cry is "No quarter."
> Those who fall before its onset die deaths of shame, and they go down to dishonored graves to which love can bring no willing tribute of flowers and over which pride can rear no enduring monument. To its prisoners it grants no exchange, holds them to no ransom, but clutches them fast in a captivity that is worse than death and ends only at the grave.

Mr. Speaker, there is no middle ground; the fight is on, to the finish, for the return of the saloon. This resolution could have been drawn so as to have prevented the return of the saloon. It was deliberately drawn so as to permit the return of the saloon. It was taken up in the House, deliberately and purposely, in such a way as to prevent any amendment to prohibit the return of the saloon. The purpose to bring back the saloon is the motive back of this entire move. Let no one be decieved and let no one mislead others as to this matter. Those who are fighting for the return of the saloon are opposed to the Representatives of the people here in Congress having the chance to vote on this matter. They are opposed to the people's representatives in the various States having the chance to vote on the various phases of this question and they are deliberately preventing the people of the Nation from having a referendum on this question to determine whether the people desire the retention of the eighteenth amendment, or the return of the barroom, or some form of sale of intoxicants under governmental control other than by the open saloon.

No chance has or will be given to either Members of Congress or members of the State legislatures or the people of our country to say whether or not they want the eighteenth amendment repealed and either a Federal or State dispensary system in its stead. Nowhere at any time—either in Congress or out—will those who are opposed to the eighteenth amendment but do not want the return of the saloon have a chance to vote their convictions. This great conservative, middle-ground, reasonable group of our very best citizens, to whom both the Democrats and Republicans sought to appeal last national campaign, are to be denied the right of a vote expressing their own views on this most vital issue. Only those are to be allowed a vote in this contest of life and death who are extreme and do not want the repeal at all or who are equally as extreme and want the return of the saloon with all its hideous consequences and nothing else.

We all have extreme views at some time on some matter and we are all wrong sometimes, and those who occupy the middle ground are right ninety-nine times out of a hundred and yet these—probably much the larger half of our voters—are the citizens of our country who are to be deliberately deprived of the right to participate in this much-heralded and much-boasted referendum.

If the wet forces in Congress want all the people to have a referendum on this question, let them submit to the States another resolution providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, but preventing the return of the saloon, and also one providing for State and/or Federal dispensaries and so on, in this way submitting to the people for their consideration the various proposals in connection with this important matter.

This will not be done. Those who favor the return of the saloon dare not give the people the right to pass on this question. But it is urged that the Democrats are bound by platform pledge to vote for the repeal resolution. Let us see about this. I do not find any plank specifically pledging repeal and the return of the saloon. Were not the people led to believe that there would be urged and sponsored repeal coupled with an absolute prohibition against the return of the saloon? Are not the wet forces of both parties now absolutely repudiating the campaign pledges and pronouncements of both parties when it is sought by them to put over this mighty drive to disfranchise all those with average views on this subject and to bring back the saloon without a fair referendum?

The extreme wet forces want just whatever is necessary to help them secure the return of the saloon. They favor the kind of a referendum that helps them; they are opposed to any referendum that might get a result other than the saloon. They always have, and now oppose all party pledges, all law, and all parts of the Constitution interfering with their drive for the return of the saloon; they favor only that which helps them in this fight. The wets are not in position to criticize those of us who do not favor this resolution. They just as well admit that they are fighting for the return of the saloon and accord to those of us who are opposed to the saloon the same honesty of purpose which they claim for themselves.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for Senate Joint Resolution 211 to submit the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the various States of the Union. On the first day of this session I voted against such a measure for the reason I thought it was not timely nor proper to put the liquor question against the remedies to overcome this depression; when the people were demanding bread they should not, at the first opportunity, be given liquor. Then, too, the proposed measure did not comply with the Democratic platform in that it did not provide for the protection of States which remained dry. During my service in Congress I have voted against all repeal and modification acts and voted for all appropriations seeking the enforcement of the prohibition laws.

There is not a doubt but what the repeal of the eighteenth amendment will be submitted to the States of the Union, if not at this session, then by the next Congress, which will be most overwhelmingly for repeal. Under such circumstances the drys should fight for the most favorable measures with proper restrictions, such as this measure contains. If this measure were left to the next Congress it is possible that legislation might be passed which would give the Federal Government the right to hold the election, the supervision thereof, and also fail to contain a provision to protect the dry States.

I am considered the standard bearer and leader of democracy in my district, and whatever honor I have as a Congressman I owe to the Democratic Party. I feel it my duty to either go with my party or get out of it. The Democratic platform adopted at the 1932 Chicago convention provided:

> We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal.

It also provided and demanded of Congress a modification of the Volstead Act. As a delegate to that convention I was opposed to and voted against this provision of the platform. It is a cardinal principle of democracy that the majority should rule, and should I place my personal opinion and views above this platform at a time when the question was made an issue, I would be attempting to be bigger than my party. I can not conclude that the overwhelming victory of last November was other than a mandate to support the party platform. It would be hypocrisy to use the platform only for the purpose of getting into office. Both the Democratic and Republican platforms demand the submission of this question by Congress to State conventions.

The laws of our Government are based upon party procedure; no party can successfully function and accomplish good for the people that is not organized and united. A caucus of the Democratic Congressmen has been called and voted to instruct its membership to vote for the submission. In my opinion, a Representative can not expect to legislate only for his district; no community can live unto itself. It is necessary that we should vote for the welfare of the entire Nation where it is not ruinous, harmful, or destructive to our own districts. I am convinced that the constituency of my district does not expect me to be out of step with my party nor to fail to function and carry out its demands.

The submission of the eighteenth amendment simply means the various States of the Union shall have the right to vote upon the question of repeal. This resolution means that elections will be held in every voting precinct; and if a majority are opposed to the repeal, then Arkansas will remain dry; unless three-fourths of the States of the Union approve this resolution, the eighteenth amendment will not be repealed. In a debate in Congress made by the leader of the prohibition forces asking for the adoption of the eighteenth amendment he said:

> The Member of either branch of the American Congress who denies the power of amendment to the States, especially an amendment which vast numbers of the people desire the States to consider, violates the basic principles both of the Constitution and of the popular Government, repudiates the fundamental rights of the States, and overturns the two most sacred privileges the people possess, the privileges of referendum and of petition.

The liquor question always has been and will always continue to be of grave importance to the welfare of our people. Under present conditions a vote for submission is not a wet vote nor in any way compromising with the liquor interests.

Regardless of the result of the vote on this repeal, I am thoroughly convinced that saloons are outlawed and will never again be permitted in this Nation.

In a recently published signed statement, Dr. A. C. Millar, minister, a leader of the Anti-Saloon League in Arkansas and the editor of the Arkansas Methodist, states:

> While I am for the eighteenth amendment, I have for several years contended that under present conditions it might be best to have a referendum on the question, and I even went so far in meetings of the executive committee of the National Anti-Saloon League as to offer a resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution under which the people might vote by States on the question.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the high esteem I have for multitudes of good friends who disagree with me on my prohibition votes, and which is not affected or diminished in the least by our honest differences of opinion, prompts me to make this statement explaining why I can not go along with the majority of the House and the majority of the body at the other end of the Capitol in support of this pending resolution for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Goaded and harassed by appalling economic conditions our people have drifted far from the moorings of safety on the liquor question. Among all of our ills piled mountain high the pending resolution is, I fear, the culminating tragedy born out of the distress of the times.

The saddest part of it all is that when the storm subsides and economic peace again settles over the land and when, with the cessation of the turmoil we might reasonably expect brighter days, contentment, and happiness ahead, we shall awaken to find that we have provided no constructive program of liquor control to take the place of prohibition but have fastened upon ourselves the old saloon and all the old evils of the liquor traffic and that after a hundred years of noble effort to solve the liquor problem we are back just where we started. If prohibition is to be repealed, we should at least submit something constructive to take its place and in the resolution of resubmission should protect the major gains it has brought about, chief among which is the elimination of the saloon.

As a newspaper writer of 40 years' experience in various large cities in close contact with life's activities, I can give first-hand evidence in regard to the damage that was done to society by the saloon. As a young police reporter, zealous in the pursuit of news, I spent a great deal of time in saloons, and in gambling places and brothels, dark and sinister establishments of which the saloon was a feeder, while I garnered human-interest stories about the saloon's tragic toll. And such opportunities to delve into the realm of human interest as we reporters of those times had, with sorrowful tragedies unfolding around us that would defy the descriptive powers of a Dickens or a Hugo!

I can see to-day, as if it were but yesterday, the saloon of the olden time, with the gambling gentry in checkered vests and reverberating haberdashery who lingered and plied their calling thereabout, and set their traps to catch their human toll, and the scarlet women with big hats and gorgeous plumes who flitted in and out and seemed always to be in the offing. I can see unsophisticated girls fresh from their mothers' apron strings caught in the net of the wine rooms and started on the downward path to perdition. It would be a hard-hearted person indeed who could see them drawn into the vortex without being touched with infinite compassion. As I look backward in the moving panorama I can see a great many men bearing the image of their Maker made into wrecks in the saloons and then delivered as human derelicts at the gates of hell.

No one need tell me that the saloon was not a social canker. It is not guesswork as far as I am concerned. I know it was by the indubitable evidence of my own eyes and ears. I know by having seen men of good intentions converted by it into beasts who went home and beat their children. I know by the girls it started on the primrose path to ruin. I know by the scores and hundreds of fine, intellectual newspaper associates of mine whom it sent to premature graves. I know by the murders, suicides, divorces, and wrecked homes I can trace to it. I know by the gamblers who swarmed around it as moths attracted to a flame and whose intake from their victims was a part of the devil's grist. I have always been against the saloon and I am against it now.

I am sorry to see so many good men on both sides of this chamber and outside of the chamber supporting it—men for whose character and motives I have as high esteem as I have for my own but who, I believe, are misled by the emotions of the hour. I think they are making a tragic mistake for which many of them will be truly sorry in the years to come.

I would forfeit their respect if I were to vote for something which I believe to be wrong. The only way I can justify the confidence of those who sent me here is always to vote according to my conception of right and as my conscience dictates, and that I always intend faithfully to do.

I can recall at this moment hundreds of splendid friends on the opposite side of the liquor question for whom I have a real affection. To them I owe this explanation of the vote I shall cast to-day. I think they regard me as being like the Irishman at the drilling match who is out of step with all of the rest of the regiment. I am with them in bonds of friendship and their sharp letters and telegrams or criticism are poignantly painful to me, but the good Lord has given me only one head to think with and one heart to love with. I can not think that any roseate embellishment of the saloon will make it righteous or that it would ever be right for me to sanction it or support its reappearance in the life of America, and I love my fellow beings too much ever to want to put this infliction upon them. There has never been any change in my attitude toward the saloon and there never will be. I want it always to remain an outlaw. As between the saloon on one hand and humanity on the other hand I take my stand for humanity. When I first ran for Congress in 1928, I so expressed myself and in each one of my two campaigns since then I have made my position plain and unequivocal. When the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment interrogated me in the recent campaign, I stated in writing my position to be:

In no event and under no circumstances by any vote or influence of mine will I be a party to the return of the saloon and the old-time liquor evils in America.

America at present is a very sick Nation. The malady we suffer is both economic and spiritual in its nature. We are now feeling the full rebound of the awful toll of war. A power higher than mortal ken or vision is teaching us the costliness of war and the danger that comes from lowering our spiritual standards. I do not know how long, O God, we shall have to remain in this crucible, but of one thing I am certain and that is that the return of the saloon and the old liquor domination would not cure our malady but would aggravate the ills that now afflict us.

The resolution (S. J. Res. 211) before us to-day opens the way for the return of the saloon and the old liquor evils under the protection of our Government. I am against it. In the name of the millions of inarticulate men, women, and children in the homes and the ordinary walks of life who are seriously thinking this afternoon about what all of this means, though their voices can not be heard in this historic chamber, I oppose this resolution, which is wide open and without a single ban or check against the saloon. I am going to play square with them and with the boys and girls of to-morrow, and with the boys and girls of all the to-morrows that are to come, by voting against the return under legal sanction of what I believe to be a damnably wicked institution.

CLARENCE R. KILLION

Mr. HILL of Alabama submitted a conference report on S. 2148, for the relief of Clarence R. Killion.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. AYRES, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 14724) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. FRENCH reserved all points of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if it is the intention to take up anything beside the Consent Calendar to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is a long Consent Calendar. To-day is the last day of this session that you will get an opportunity to call the calendar. It seems to the Chair that the entire day, if necessary, should be devoted to the consideration of this calendar, and he indulges the hope that the membership will cooperate with the Speaker in facilitating the consideration until the calendar is completed to-day?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York. In a conversation with the majority leader a few moments ago he assented to a suggestion that he ask for another night for the purpose of completing the Consent Calendar, if it becomes necessary.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, that does not interfere with the program for this afternoon, does it?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. What is the order for the 22d of February?

The SPEAKER. If the House determines to dispense with Calendar Wednesday, it can do what it desires to do.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker appoint the Clerk or one of the Members to read George Washington's Farewell Address.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first consult the majority leader and others before he recognizes anyone to ask unanimous consent for that purpose. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar.

MODOC NATIONAL FOREST

The first bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 188) to extend the provisions of the forest exchange act, approved March 20, 1922, to certain lands adjacent to the Modoc National Forest, in the State of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDING CERTAIN LANDS TO THE MODOC NATIONAL FOREST

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 189) to add certain lands to the Modoc National Forest, in the State of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The department properly recommends striking out certain provisions in this bill which are not necessary and would not be affected in the situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the reason why we should extend the national forest to a tract of land comprising 640 acres already entered upon and privately held? Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the objection.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The author of this bill has been temporarily called from the Chamber, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT]. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over until he returns.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RETURN TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS OF UNEMPLOYED FILIPINOS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 577), to provide for the return to the Philippine Islands of unemployed Filipinos resident in the continental United States, to authorize appropriations to accomplish that result, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA TRIBES OF INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4578) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the rights of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians to compensation on a basis of guardian and ward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. A companion House bill was considered on the Consent Calendar and was objected to about a month or so ago. I have given further consideration to this bill, even to the extent of examining some of the United States Supreme Court decisions which confirm the opinion I held that this bill should not pass. Therefore, I object.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interfere and ask permission to speak, but I do want to say that if the gentleman has definitely made up his mind that he is going to object I shall not detain the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, since a companion House bill to this was under consideration I have examined Supreme Court decisions and they confirm my position taken at that time.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then the gentleman is going to object?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LIMIT OF COST OF ONE AIRCRAFT CARRIER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14243) to authorize an increase in the limit of cost of one aircraft carrier.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object. This would add another $2,000,000.

SUPERINTENDENT OF HAWAII NATIONAL PARK

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4374) to empower the superintendent of the Hawaii National Park to perform the functions now performed by the United States commissioner for the said national park, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, give the Delegate from Hawaii a chance to explain his bill.

Mr. BLANTON. But Congress is constantly appointing too many assistants, both in Hawaii and the United States. Let the principals do some work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects to the present consideration of the bill.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRY OF LANDS WITHDRAWN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 13745, to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing any of the minerals subject to disposition under the general leasing law or acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not want to reserve the objection to this bill. I object, Mr. Speaker.

LEASE CONCESSIONS OF RESERVOIR SITES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5070, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease concessions on reservoir sites and other lands in connection with Indian irrigation projects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, there is insufficient information in this report to satisfy me. What kind of concessions are these that are to be given?

Mr. LEAVITT. The lands have to do with homes and pastures, and other uses to which the area may be put. Of course, the concessions would also be business concessions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what I am getting at. They are leases to business people to put up some sort of a business on this Government property?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, where do the Indians fit in on this?

Mr. LEAVITT. I offered an amendment myself when this was before the committee. Of course, the gentleman knows it is not my bill. In the reprint the gentleman will notice the first line reads: "The Secretary of the Interior, after consultation with the Indians involved."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, yes. The gentleman anticipated my next question. What good is consultation if we do not give the last say to the Indians? After all, it was their money that built these projects.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does the gentleman wish to change that to "consent" rather than "consultation"?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, I would like to have it "consent," and I would like to know if the Indians really want these concessions there?

Mr. LEAVITT. Oh, yes; I am sure they do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am fearful, if we make the concession conditional upon the consent of the Indians, it will be difficult of operation. These are short-term leases, just merely for the surface rights. We virtually destroy the administration of the bill if we require the consent of the Indian tribes.

Mr. LEAVITT. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is entirely correct on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am in sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from New York in trying to safeguard the rights of the Indians, and we provide here that they shall be consulted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows these are not short-term concessions. The gentleman also knows that a few days ago we had an illustration of those concessions, where they put up a building, and after they found the concession was not profitable, they wanted the Government to pay for the building.

Mr. STAFFORD. I regret very much the gentleman has brought that matter back to my attention, for the reason, as stated on that occasion, that in my early years I was in the concession business, and perhaps I know more about the concession business than the gentleman from New York did when he was out in Arizona. I believe the concessionaires should have had the privilege to remove their improvements, as they are generally constructed with that understanding.

Mr. LEAVITT. These concessions are a source of revenue to the Indians. The land is withdrawn and can not be so handled. The concessions will result in the money going to the Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. These concessions are of a temporary character. Some little boom going on, and some tradesmen want to get a lease on Indian lands while that boom is on for perhaps 5 or 10 years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the bill says no concession to exceed a period of 10 years. It seems to me that can hardly be called a short term.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, that is a short term. There is public work to be inaugurated out in the Indian country and some person wants to obtain a lease for 10 years to erect a temporary shack to sell merchandise and the like. It is impractical for the Secretary of the Interior to get the consent of the Indian tribe. That is a matter for immediate action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In its present form I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does the gentleman wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to give the Indians some say.

Mr. LEAVITT. That is what I intended by my committee amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will offer the amendment which I suggested.

Mr. LEAVITT. I offered the amendment with reference to "consultation." I do not have authority to offer the amendment which the gentleman suggested. It is not my bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

WATER SUPPLY, UNITED STATES NAVAL STATION, GUANTANAMO BAY, CUBA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14201, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make a long-term contract for a supply of water to the United States naval station at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STATE OF WYOMING

The Clerk called the next bill, S 3475, to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664) relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I am willing for the gentleman from Wyoming to make a statement if he desires, but I do not think we ought to amend any acts that created States by unanimous consent in the closing hours of Congress.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think we ought to amend any of the acts creating any States in the closing hours of Congress, at a time when we can not carefully consider them, especially on a day like this, when most Members are thinking only of froth instead of having on their minds, and close to their hearts, subjects of more importance to the people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OSAGE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3085, relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice in a statement in the report the commissioner says:

> Some question has been raised by attorneys for various oil companies as to the phraseology of the acts of 1906 and 1929 in regard to the extension of restrictions on trust property.

Can the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY] give me some information as to this?

Mr. DISNEY. This is not my bill. I shall object to the bill unless it is amended.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to get some information on this point. I do not see just how these oil companies enter into this situation. Is there any gentleman here who can give me some information? The bill was reported by Mr. LOOFBOUROW.

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In the first place, how do the attorneys for oil companies enter into the situation? Has the gentleman read the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs? It is February 15, 1932, transmitted in a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman from New York knows that these oil leases in the Osage Tribe are put up and sold at public auction. The gentleman from New York probably knows also that the mineral rights are reserved to the tribe. I do not know the particular inquiry the gentleman from New York is making. I do not see where the attorneys for the oil companies should be interested, because the oil rights are reserved to the tribe. The leases are sold at public auction.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not I who interjects the oil companies in this, it is the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. HASTINGS. My understanding is that this bill if changed by certain amendments that will be offered by the gentleman who represents the district, Mr. DISNEY, is entirely agreeable to the Indian Bureau.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May we have the proposed amendments read?

Mr. DISNEY. I shall be pleased to read them. The first section is agreeable, but I wish to offer an amendment on page 4. If anyone is going to object to the amendments I shall object to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Texas said he was going to object if any amendment was offered. I do not see the gentleman from Texas here.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; he is here.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. DISNEY. If he is going to object to the amendments I shall object to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May we hear the amendments read? I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma if he will tell us what his amendments are.

Mr. DISNEY. On page 4, line 3, after the words "Osage Tribe" insert "with the approval of the board of county commissioners."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why is this amendment necessary?

Mr. DISNEY. This relates to the homestead laws and surplus lands. It is to effect a change of the taxation feature on these lands.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That undoes the very thing the gentleman is seeking to do, does it not?

Mr. DISNEY. No; it does not.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Osages have homestead lands that are exempt from taxation. The purpose of the amendment is to allow the exchange of homesteads with the consent of the county commissioners, as I understand it.

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular? The bill provides that the exchanged land shall be of equal area. Has the gentleman any objection to inserting "of approximately equal value"?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is left to the discretion of the county commissioners and the Secretary of the Interior. They have to consent together.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the other amendment?

Mr. DISNEY. The next amendment is a similar amendment in line 10; and then, in lines 10 and 11 eliminate the words "or otherwise."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So it will read:

> That each tract after the change and designation shall take the status of the other as it existed prior to the change in designation, as to alienation, taxation, and that any order of change or designation, with the approval of the board of county commissioners, shall be recorded in the proper office of Osage County.

Mr. DISNEY. The next amendment is to add a new section, section 4.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration meets my approval, I believe, but if we are going to have a large number of amendments it will not.

Mr. DISNEY. Without the amendments I shall object to the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, let me say that as I understand these amendments they meet with the approval of the gentleman representing the district in which Osage County is located and they are offered with the approval of the Indian Office. The Indian Office has carefully studied these amendments, and I may say to the gentlemen from New York and the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am advised these amendments meet with the approval of the Indian Office.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I see no objection to the amendments requiring the approval of the county commissioners. What is the new section the gentleman proposes to add?

Mr. DISNEY. The next amendment is as follows:

> Where a certificate of competency has or may hereafter be revoked or canceled in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the Act of Congress approved February 27, 1925, such revocation shall not take effect as to creditors until the order revoking the same has been filed for record in the office of the county clerk of Osage County.

Mr. HASTINGS. There ought not to be any objection to that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why were not these amendments given consideration in the committee? The gentleman is asking the House to accept amendments of very general character. Will the gentleman again read his last amendment, which I think is a rather important one?

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish it understood that I am reserving the right to object throughout the discussion of these amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly. The gentleman is only reading the amendment for information; he is not offering them. Will the gentleman read his last amendment again?

Mr. DISNEY. The last amendment reads:

> Where a certificate of competency has or may hereafter be revoked or canceled in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved February 27, 1925, such revocation shall not take effect as to creditors until the order revoking the same has been filed for record in the office of the county clerk of Osage County.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Just along this line, suppose a certificate of competency is properly revoked; suppose the individual is wholly incompetent and his certificate is withheld, would the gentleman dissipate all his property among creditors who dealt with the incompetent Indian?

Mr. DISNEY. No; this will operate as notice.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the gentleman does not exactly understand it. If an Indian is declared competent now, of course he can pay his debts and ought to pay them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; in other words, he has the right of contract.

Mr. HASTINGS. If, for instance, the Interior Department revokes the certificate of competency, it does not affect his creditors until notice is given and, of course, notice will be given by the certificate being recorded.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon whom is the obligation to record it?

Mr. HASTINGS. The Indian Office will do that at once.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It ought to be done at once, because otherwise all the property of this Indian may be dissipated.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the effect of section 4 of the law of 1925 which is referred to in the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. DISNEY. That provides for the granting of a certificate or the cancellation of a certificate of competency.

Mr. HASTINGS. If a man is competent, he pays his debts and is subject to the payment of all legal obligations, and ought to be.

Mr. STAFFORD. But, as soon as he is declared competent, then his property should not be dissipated before proper notice is given.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, if it is revoked, public notice ought to be given at once and that will be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who is to give the public notice?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, well——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says, "Oh, well," but there is no provision in the gentleman's amendment to that effect.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Secretary of the Interior; and if the gentleman has any objection to the bill on that account, it can and will be amended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Such an amendment will not be objectionable.

Mr. DISNEY. Section 5—this is another amendment—where an Osage Indian headright or any interest therein has been acquired through inheritance, purchase, or otherwise, by any person, firm, or corporation, any person acquiring such headright or interest therein being not of Indian blood, it shall be lawful for any creditor of such person, firm, or corporation to cause a garnishment to issue and to garnishee any money owing any such person, firm, or corporation by the Osage agency or the Secretary of the Interior by reason of the ownership of such Indian headright or interest therein.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think that should be included. That is entirely foreign to this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, is it understood that all the amendments that were offered by the Department are going to be put in this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not section 5. If so, I shall have to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless the bureau amendments are going to be put in, I shall object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will not press the last amendment.

Mr. DISNEY. I am not pressing the bill. I am objecting to the bill unless the amendments are in it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object to section 5 being incorporated in the bill.

Mr. DISNEY. Then I object to the bill.

ACCEPTANCE OF BEQUEST OF THE LATE WILLIAM F. EDGAR

The Clerk called the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of the bequest of the late William F. Edgar, of Los Angeles County, State of California, for the benefit of the museum and library connected with the office of the Surgeon General of the United States Army.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, may I make a friendly suggestion?

In the first place, there is no reference in the law as to the property involved. True you refer to it in your whereas clause. In the second place, you authorize the Secretary to receive this property as designated in the will, but you make no provision and give no authority to receive the accumulated interest, whatever it may be, and there is some interest, because this money is on deposit.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, the money is in the bank drawing interest and whenever you authorize the department to accept the bequest, it accepts it just like it finds it, including the money and the interest.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I am afraid not.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; especially with this expression of legislative intent put in the RECORD now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All right; now that the gentleman has the legislative intent in the RECORD, if the gentleman will look at the body of the bill he will note it says that "the Surgeon General of the United States Army be, and is hereby, authorized to accept the said bequest." This is the first time there is any reference to a bequest in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought to add an amendment describing it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have prepared an amendment striking out the words "said bequest" and inserting the following: "The bequest of William F. Edgar, of Los Angeles County, Calif., as contained in his will and codicil thereto."

Mr. BLANTON. That is all right. That ought to be in there. That is a wise suggestion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not believe "interest" is necessary?

Mr. BLANTON. I think that is carried with it, because it has been drawing interest and certainly the interest has become part of and goes with the principal, but he may make that plain also in his amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, if the gentleman pleases, the bill provides that this property, of course, is to be used for the purpose designated in the law. So I provide in line 8, after "codicil," insert the following: "copy of which shall be filed in the General Accounting Office." Then, of course, he can properly audit the expenditures.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly. We will pass the amendments proposed by the gentleman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas by a codicil to his will the late William F. Edgar, of Los Angeles County, Calif., provided as follows:

"4. After the foregoing bequests are made I desire that the bulk of the funds in the hands of my trustees may go to the benefit of the museum and library of or connected with the office of the Surgeon General, United States Army, and I therefore revoke the bequest in the foregoing will and bequeath to said institution as follows. Second:

"I give and bequeath to these institutions to the extent of $40,000, or what may be lawful in that amount, or if not lawful then less, but in the proportion as follows: To the museum connected with the office of the Surgeon General, United States Army, at Washington, District of Columbia, four-fifths of said amount above mentioned, and one-fifth of said amount I give and bequeath to said library connected with the same office."

Therefore be it—

Resolved, etc., That the Surgeon General of the United States Army be, and is hereby, authorized to accept the said bequest and to receipt therefor on behalf of the United States and to deposit the funds so received in the Treasury of the United States as a special fund dedicated to the purposes stated in said codicil, said fund to be subject to disbursement for such purposes upon vouchers submitted by the Surgeon General of the United States Army under authority of the Secretary of War and to be available until expended.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "accept," strike out the words "said bequest" and insert the following: "The bequest of William F. Edgar, of Los Angeles County, Calif., as contained in his will and testament and codicil thereto and such interest as may have accrued from the funds covered by such bequest."

In line 8, after the word "codicil," insert "a copy of which shall be filed in the General Accounting Office."

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer the following amendment to the LaGuardia amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "to" insert the word "late," so it shall read "the late William S. Edgar."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I ask unanimous consent that the whereases be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TO CONFER DEGREE OF BACHELOR OF SCIENCE UPON GRADUATES OF THE NAVAL ACADEMY

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 13367, to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

PAN-AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

The Clerk read the next resolution on the Consent Calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 243, authorizing the President of the United States to extend a welcome to the Pan-American Medical Association, which is to hold its convention in the United States in March, 1933.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized on behalf of the Government of the United States to extend a welcome to the Pan-American Medical Association, which is to hold its fourth congress, being its first congress held in an English-speaking nation, at Dallas, Tex., from March 21 to March 25, 1933.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPROPRIATION FOR LI PO-TIEN

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 14323, authorizing an appropriation to the Government of China for the account of Li Po-tien.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY AND ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

The Clerk read the next resolution on the Consent Calendar, House Joint Resolution 536, authorizing an appropriation for participation by the United States in an international monetary and economic conference to be held in London.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object. This would be $150,000 wasted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it, but I want to say that just now we should stay out of Europe. We ought just now to keep our people out of Europe. To spend $150,000 on this conference would be foolish in the extreme, and might involve us in most serious complications.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to say that statements like that made on the floor of the House are reflected all over the world. I want to say to the gentleman that this conference was suggested by the United States Government. It has the approval of the incoming administration. It is to be one of the most important conferences that ever has taken place.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know how much this Government spent foolishly in Europe last year, and I know that nothing was accomplished, and to spend this additional $150,000 would be a waste, and it would be utterly foolish.

If we do not keep our so-called diplomats out of Europe, they are going to embarrass us in many ways. They will involve us in a situation where it will be contended by those special interests that would benefit by hundreds of millions overnight for foreign debts to be canceled, that our Government is obligated by some commitment they made, to grant some additional concession respecting debts, even if they do not go so far as to demand outright cancellation.

Then, too, with conditions disturbed as they are both in Europe and the Far East, some unwise move or statement made by Americans there could involve us in serious complications, and as one Member of this Congress I am going to insist that we stay at home for a while and attend strictly to our own business.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The time to have kept out of Europe was in 1917.

Mr. BLANTON. And another very opportune time to keep out is right now, at least for a while. I object. I may not stop the passage of this bill if a rule is presented, but I can stop its passage now. I object.

STATUARY HALL

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Concurrent Resolution 47.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 47

Where each State may have statues of two of its distinguished citizens placed in Statutary Hall; and

Whereas the weight of the statues already placed therein is so great as seriously to endanger the stability of Statuary Hall, so that a number of those statues should be removed; and

Whereas certain States have applied for representation, and such requests must either be declined or deferred until proper provision for the reception of the statues from them can be made: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Architect of the Capitol, upon the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts, is hereby authorized and directed to relocate within the Capitol any of the statues already received and placed in Statuary Hall, and to provide for the reception and location of the statutes received hereafter from the States.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, and I do that for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS], a question in respect to House Joint Resolution 536, which has just been objected to. The title of the joint resolution is for an appropriation for participation by the United States in an international monetary and economic conference. Last year when the appropriation was made, it was made for an international monetary conference, including silver. I rise to ask if the gentleman will consent to a change in this joint resolution when it is passed, as it will be finally, to conform to that.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not going to be passed by unanimous consent. It may be passed by a rule.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I am asking the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee a question.

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. Personally, I have no objection. I see no reason for it, however, because of the fact that the agenda includes silver, and it has been passed in the Senate in its present form.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I call the gentleman's attention to the present appropriation that is running for this purpose. It is for participation by the United States in an international monetary conference, including silver. That was passed on the first of July, 1932, and if the appropriation to be authorized here is to continue for the same purpose I suggest to the gentleman that the text ought to be exactly the same.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But it is not the same convention at all.

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. It is a broader convention. The question of silver is included in the agenda.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON] weakens his case by insisting on silver being included in that way, because he will connote the idea that silver to-day is not before the monetary conference.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I wish the gentleman from Tennessee would put the agenda and all of the information that he has in respect to it in the RECORD, because apparently some Members of the House do not know that negotiations have been carried on for the purpose of bringing about this conference and the necessity for it. I think that all of the information ought to be put into the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows how many other questions are connected with the agenda now. Eventually, the one of most importance to Europe will be the cancellation of honest debts they owe us.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do; but I am not afraid to face representatives of other countries, because we are living in this world to-day, and we can not isolate ourselves as if we were on some far-off planet.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not all there is to it, and the gentleman knows that. I am against permitting any step to be taken which might end in cancellation of debts Europe now owes us.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The agenda is as follows: First, monetary and credit policy; second, prices; third, resumption of the movement of capital; fourth, restrictions of international trade; fifth, tariff and treaty policy; sixth, organization of production and trade. The gentleman will see from that that "monetary" will include silver, and there is a further discussion by experts in reference to this matter, including silver. Recently India and China have joined in this world conference, and experts on the silver question will be sent from this country.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then, I understand the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee has no objection to it?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have no objection to it, but I do not see the reason for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it would be a mistake to change the wording to include silver in that way. Why not include copper pennies? The gentleman is weakening his case.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The question is entirely different from that of copper pennies.

Mr. JENKINS. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] expect to adopt some other proceeding by which this bill may be passed?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I certainly do. I shall either go before the Committee on Rules or ask the Speaker of the House to recognize me for suspension of the rules.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, I believe if the gentleman would wait a while, and call this bill up again, we can pass it at this time. I am sure the gentleman from Texas, who is a very able and intelligent and useful legislator, will get over his temporary peevishness by that time and will go along with us.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York ought to know that the prime purpose of European nations to-day is to get us into a conference over yonder for the purpose of canceling our foreign debts. And I am not going to allow any measure to pass by unanimous consent that may even tend to bring that about.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But we control that situation.

Mr. BLANTON. We can not control it at all, and that is the reason I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the preamble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHANGING THE NAVY RATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14438) to effect needed changes in the Navy ration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, now that we have attended to Statuary Hall, I want to ask the gentleman the necessity of this bill at this time. After all, we provide and appropriate for rations. It seems to me it makes it too rigid if we define the quantity and particular food. I notice with a great deal of interest the salt pork has been reduced and cream and chicken have been added.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will examine the law, he will find now that the ration is prescribed by statute, and the object and purpose of this is to change the present statute and permit the addition of more vegetables and different kinds of rations which the law to-day requires to be fed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not object to that. Is this based upon a matter of nourishment or one of delicacies?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is based upon nourishment and economy.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can see no objection to that.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I will object unless the gentleman wishes me to reserve it—this bill absolutely nullifies the law with reference to the amount that can be expended for rations. That will be seen in section 4.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman intends to object, I trust he will object and not take up the time of the committee.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NEW SITES FOR COURTS AND POST OFFICE, HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

The Clerk called the next business (H. R. 14321) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion to acquire a new site in Huntsville, Ala., and to construct a building thereon for the accommodation of the courts, post office, and other Government offices.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, where does the gentleman get any authority from the Department of Justice that approves of this, and requires that the sessions of the court will be held there?

Mr. ALMON. They are held there now by law. Regardless of this bill, the courts will be held there in the new building.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why have we a specific bill on this one when we have a complete building program?

Mr. ALMON. I will explain it in just a minute, briefly. I may say that this bill was written in the Treasury Department and sent to me and I introduced it, and the bill had a unanimous report from the committee. The Treasury Department now has authority to buy or condemn property adjacent to the building and build it on the old site, but the price of that property adjacent to the old building is so unreasonably high that they have asked permission here to buy a new site. If that permission is given, it will enable the Government to buy a lot and build a house on it and save the old house, worth at least $50,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My reference was to another bill. I was confused on the bills.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. If this bill is passed, what effect will that have on the appropriation that is now made?

Mr. ALMON. It will not affect it at all. They can not expend to exceed the amount allocated for that building, $234,000.

Mr. JENKINS. I knew of another case somewhat like this; and it struck me that, if the appropriation was made to erect a post-office building on the old site, the money could not be used to erect a post-office building on another site.

Mr. ALMON. By passing this bill it gives the Treasury Department the authority to do that in another part of the town and save the old site and the old building. If we do not pass this bill, it will force the Government to buy property adjacent to the old site, which will cost the Government a great deal more money. It will cost more than the new site, which will be in another part of the town.

Mr. JENKINS. Did I understand the gentleman to say this bill was drawn by the Treasury Department?

Mr. ALMON. It was, and I introduced it at the request of the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to acquire a new site in Huntsville, Ala., and to construct a building thereon for the accommodation of the courts, post office, and other Government offices, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $234,000, in lieu of the asquisition of additional land, demolition of building, and construction of a new building within said limit of cost fixed under authority of the act approved July 21, 1932, as modified by the act approved June 30, 1932.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL BUILDING, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 583, to provide for a change of site of the Federal building to be constructed at Binghamton, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JENKINS. Reserving the right to object, I see there is no report from either department on this bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. This resolution was drawn after much collaboration by the Treasury Department and also two committees of the House, namely, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in cooperation with the citizens of Binghamton, N. Y. It is a matter of mutual agreement whereby we are trying to do what the people want without increasing the limit of cost that has already been made.

Mr. JENKINS. That is information that is not in the report.

Mr. LANHAM. They have collaborated with us.

Mr. JENKINS. With that understanding, I will withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds inform us how much land is to be taken from the site for street purposes?

Mr. LANHAM. It is set forth in the last paragraph of the bill. Practically all of this new site is now owned by the Government, and at the time of its acquisition the people of Binghamton themselves contributed $20,000 toward its purchase.

Mr. STAFFORD. Which the report discloses; but the report does not show how much of this old site is going to be donated to the city for street purposes.

Mr. MEAD. None of the old site. It is a part of the new site, in order to straighten out the street. It is at an angle, and they gave them a small strip of land on one side, none on the other, to straighten the street in front of the post office.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just a small portion of the new tract?

Mr. MEAD. Just a small portion of the new tract.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then what was the need of this unusual provision that after the new post-office building has been occupied, no rental postal station shall be maintained within 2,000 feet?

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, that is a matter of economy.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not question that; but what is the need of incorporating it as legislation?

Mr. LANHAM. There is at present a postal substation, operated at a cost of almost $10,000 a year. This new site is in the center of the business district, and we are advised that no substation will be necessary. Consequently there will be an annual saving of approximately $10,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has no fear that this will not be taken as a slight on the incoming administration as to their position for economy and that they can not be relied upon? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANHAM. Well, I think we can rely upon the judgment of those who have collaborated with us in that regard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cause the new Federal building at Binghamton, N. Y. (authorized by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1587)), to be erected on the Government-owned site located on the north side of Henry Street and extending northwardly between Washington and State Streets, in lieu of on the site of the present post-office building. For such purpose the Secretary is authorized and directed to (a) cancel the existing contract or contracts for the erection of such new building and make a settlement with the contractor for damages sustained by him as the result of such cancellation, or (b) effect a modification of such contract or contracts to provide for construction of the new building on the Henry Street site, and allow reasonable additional compensation for any damages or increased costs occasioned the contractor by the change to such new site.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to purchase additional land necessary to permit the construction of such new building on the Henry Street site.

SEC. 3. All obligations incurred and/or expenditures made in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution shall be limited to the amount made available and fixed by existing law for the demolition of the old building and construction of such new building, and shall not be in excess of such amount.

SEC. 4. After occupancy of the new building constructed pursuant to this joint resolution, no rented postal station shall be maintained within 2,000 feet of such building.

SEC. 5. The act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of the Government property acquired for a post-office site in Binghamton, N. Y.," approved May 13, 1930 (46 Stat. 273), is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transfer by the usual quitclaim deed to the city of Binghamton, N. Y., the southerly triangular portion (measuring approximately 59.84 feet on Washington Street and 159.75 feet on Henry Street), or such portion thereof as the Secretary may deem practicable, for the purpose of straightening out said Henry Street, of the Government property acquired for a post-office site in such city, fronting on the north side of Henry Street and extending northwardly between Washington and State Streets."

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAKE OF THE WOODS

The Clerk called the next Senate joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 124, to provide for the determination of claims for damages sustained by the fluctuation of the water levels of Lake of the Woods in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes under reservation of objection. I wish to make some observations on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a casual reading of the bill and the report would lead to the conclusion that the Government is under an obligation to pay the claims that have been determined by the Secretary of War; but if you refer to the report of the Secretary of War as found in House Document No. 774 of the Seventy-first Congress, third session, on which this resolution is predicated, you will come to the conclusion that there has never been a more outrageous attempt to get money out of the Treasury of the United States than this.

What are the facts? Long before any settlers settled around the Lake of the Woods the lake levels were raised, and raised higher than they were at the time when the treaty was entered into between Canada and the United States. In 1892 artificial barriers were placed in the Rainy River, 36 miles from the international border, that raised the lake level 5 feet. That dam was partially washed away afterwards, but still the water level was raised nearly 3 feet.

I call your attention to the report of the Secretary of War, in which a tabulation showing high-water levels is printed. This is found on page 3. The extreme high-water natural levels prior to 1892—and, remember, the treaty was not entered into until 1915—was 1,062½ feet. The level fixed by the treaty is 1,062½ feet.

These lands on the Lake of the Woods were never opened to entry until 1910 and 1915, and now these persons who have entered on these lands are seeking to put their hands into the Treasury of the United States based upon a statement in the treaty that if there were any claims for flowage the United States would pay the claims of its citizens and the Canadians would pay claims arising on the Canadian side.

I took occasion to read this report of the Secretary of War. It covers 12 pages. I have read the treaty also. If you but read the report accompanying this resolution you would come to the conclusion that this is a meritorious claim presented to Congress a few years back for damage arising from flowage, but let me read you what the Secretary of War said in this connection:

> Settlement on the United States shore was not authorized until after the lake level had been raised. The lands on the south and west shores were opened October 5, 1898, and those in the northwest angle on June 15, 1894.

I read another paragraph:

> These facts create the impression that speculation with the hope of obtaining flowage damages prompted some of these entries.

Their idea was that the land having been overflown they might be able to make some claim for damage by reason of Canada having raised the level long before they had ever entered upon the land. Let me read one further paragraph:

> The greater part of the lands have undergone practically no change since they were opened to settlement. Except for the opening of a few farms on the south shore near Warroad on Zippel Creek, and at some other widely scattered points, agricultural activities along the lake shores are slight. Within the zone subject to overflow in the past years, including a total of 39,620 acres of privately owned land, only about 300 acres have at any time been broken by the plow.

I invite your attention to this report if you really want to see how easy it is for covert interests to get their hands under the tent and grab some of the money out of the Treasury. There is no basis whatsoever for the payment of this $77,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reason I am taking the floor on this matter at this time is because I am going out of Congress and I wish to call the attention of the membership of this House to what I regard as an outrageous claim. I ascertained these facts only after digging back in the records. I do not incorporate in the RECORD matters that I uncover, but I take the floor to call attention to the facts in cases which I consider important. With my multitudinous duties it is impossible for me to incorporate these things in extensions of remarks.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Does the gentleman know how many of these claimants are dead, insane, or have assigned their claims at a discount?

Mr. STAFFORD. No one had a claim to damage from flowage when they entered upon the land. At that time the level had been raised, yet they are seeking to get nearly $100,000, basing their claim upon matters which give them no right to assert any claim at all.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just preceded me acts as though he were giving the House something new. He was not a Member of this House in 1926, I believe. Is that correct?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. At that time I was on the subcommittee and opposed this bill. I brought those facts before the House at that time, with the insistence that these people who had made the entries there after the water level had been raised were entitled to no damages. I succeeded finally in getting an amendment by which it should be reported back to the Committee on Foreign Affairs in that it provided that the Secretary of War should assess these damages. It was over my protest, because I did not think there was a liability on the part of the Government, but after it was heard in this House it was passed and became the law. Since that time various efforts have been made before the Committee on Foreign Affairs to get this shifted from our committee to the courts.

You will note in this bill that we amended that was the purpose, and the claims they were making were for something like $800,000 for damages; but on account of this statute, and feeling we were bound by this statute, we brought this bill out under reports of the Secretary of War that these were the damages that should be paid. It is for this reason that this bill has been reported, and if you are ever going to get rid of it, and unless you are going to nullify that statute, you should pass this bill and let these people get advantage of it.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. I ask the gentleman to yield at this moment because I know we are proceeding on what amounts to a unanimous-consent calendar, and because I was the author of a bill for Lake of the Woods claimants and I was on the floor and heard my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. He is incorrect in everything he says about this bill except as to the unfair attitude of the War Department. I have a high regard for my colleague from Wisconsin, and he is ordinarily right; but I want to say, and I shall have to leave it in the RECORD if he leaves his remarks there, that I have never seen him so misinformed on any subject since I have been in Congress as he is on this subject. I regret I will not be permitted to argue this on its merits. My colleague has not had the advantage of hours and hours of hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I do not care what he says about me, but his language is a reflection on the integrity of the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. There has never been a more meritorious bill on behalf of any claimants than the one that passed the Senate and was before this committee, in this case. The committee did what they thought was proper, and did not do what we asked, namely, give American citizens their day in court. I want to say that that is the very essence of Americanism, and yet the committee was conscientious and so strict that they would not even give us that right and they adhered to arbitrary findings of the War Department engineers. My colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is entirely mistaken as to the facts in this case.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to state this in conclusion. I never thought at any time there was any legal liability, and the records will show that I made this fight some six years ago, but the House did not agree with me. The act of 1926, passed in reference to the Lake of the Woods, provided that the Secretary of War should make investigations as to the damages to the property overflown by the lake and report that amount back to the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House. It took the Secretary of War some two or three years to have this investigation and appraisals of damages to all the different properties and finally did make this report to your committee. While this investigation was being made by the War Department, as provided by statute, various bills were introduced before your committee by Members of the House from Minnesota, insisting that these matters be left to the courts of the State. In each instance these bills were defeated, because your committee knew that damages in large amounts were claimed and felt that an injustice would be done the Government if it was not determined by the War Department as provided. This bill, as reported out, was opposed by the Members of Congress interested in this matter, from Minnesota, but your committee felt that the amounts reported by the War Department were just if liability of the Government was granted in accordance with the act of 1926; and in order to get this matter settled after some six years, I feel that this bill should be passed. I have not yet changed my mind as to the original liability of the Government; but, having made my fight some six years ago along the lines then that the gentleman from Wisconsin now undertakes to enlighten the House and my position having been overridden and this statute passed, your committee, in making this report, is merely following the law in reference to this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MODOC NATIONAL FOREST

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, when we began the call of the calendar this afternoon it was agreed that the bill (H. R. 189) to add certain lands to the Modoc National Forest in the State of California would be passed over without prejudice. I ask that that bill be called now.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 189) to add certain lands to the Modoc National Forest, in the State of California.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from California in just what way the whole people of the United States will be benefited by incorporating this 640 acres of land in the Modoc National Forest?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is intended to add this 640 acres of land to the national forest for a possible exchange of land for purposes of watershed protection and fire protection. This is an area that is adjacent to the national forest and is in private ownership. It is cut-over land. It is a fire menace, and to properly administer the timber of the people of the United States it is desired to add this land so that proper protection may be given to it by the Forest Service.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not the department send this bill here?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is approved by the department.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not the department send the bill here, if it were a Government matter?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It has been approved by the department.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but it was introduced here not by the department but by the gentleman at the instance of some one, I do not know whom.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; not by the department.

Mr. BLANTON. At whose instance was the bill introduced?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It was introduced primarily after talking with the officials of the Forest Service in this locality.

Mr. BLANTON. But the talk came from the gentleman to the officials, and not from the officials to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; it was the other way around. It came from the officials to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the United States Government officials bring this question up themselves?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. After I had discussed with them fire-protection matters in that vicinity, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the suggestion from the department followed a conversation that the gentleman had with them.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman suggest this would help the situation?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. As a matter of general fire protection in that locality, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman in mind any interest or any individual there that may be involved?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I have not the slightest idea in whom ownership may be.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any particular individual that the gentleman had in mind who would be interested in getting this done?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I have not any idea who the owner may be.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman did not answer my question.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; I have not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when the bill was originally under consideration I stated that four entries had been made on this 640 acres of land, and I assume this is to grant the right to these four entrymen to take other lands.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. If an exchange can be worked out, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should the Government give consideration to these four entrymen on this section of land?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Because it has been the policy throughout the forest reserves to make exchanges where it is to the advantage of the forest reserve for administration purposes, for consolidations, watershed protection, or fire protection.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have been objecting to similar bills of much larger extent where they sought to take in hundreds of thousands of acres. This is a small parcel, it is true, and I did not know but what there may be some exceptional conditions that would warrant our receding from the position we have taken heretofore in objecting to such omnibus extension bills.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes; this is land that is in an intense fire area. The fire menace in this locality every year is very severe, and we are endeavoring to extend protection so as to keep down fires in the national forests and protect Government timber.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there is a special condition of affairs pertaining to this section that warrants our extending the forest borders to this section of land?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is my opinion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, the department recommends the striking out of everything on line 3 after the word "that" down to and including the word "resource" in line 1, on page 2. I have an amendment to carry this out.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is satisfactory.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to any existing valid claims or entries, all lands of the United States in the areas hereinafter described be, and the same are hereby, added to and made parts of the Modoc National Forest, in the State of California, to be hereafter administered under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests, for the purpose of production of timber, regulation of stream flow, and the improvement and utilization of the forage resource; and the provisions of the act approved March 20, 1922 (U. S. C., title 16, secs. 486, 487), entitled "An act to consolidate national forest lands," as amended, are hereby extended and made applicable to all other lands within the said described area: Northeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, south half northwest quarter, southwest quarter, east half southeast quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter, section 15; and the east half northeast quarter, section 22; all in township 39 north, range 11 east, Modoc County, Calif., Mount Diablo base and meridian.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 1, in line 3, after the word "That" strike out the balance of the line and all of lines 4 to 9, inclusive; and on page 2, line 1, strike out the words "utilization of the forage resource."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 5, strike out the word "other" and in the same line strike out the word "said" and after the word "the" and before the word "described" insert the word "following."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FUTURE TRADING IN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 108, to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the cost of maintaining the present system of future trading in agricultural products, and to ascertain what classes of citizens bear such costs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

THIRD INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON PRIVATE AERIAL LAW

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, House Joint Resolution 568, a joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in the third international conference on private aerial law to be held in Rome, Italy, in 1933.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

ACQUISITION OF LAND IN THE VICINITY OF CAMP BULLIS, TEX.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 12769, to provide an additional authorization for the acquisition of land in the vicinity of Camp Bullis, Tex.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, how many artillery ranges have we in operation?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am sorry I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I remember when the original bill was up for the acquisition of this property, it was said it was the only artillery range, and I remember another instance where the appropriation was for a cavalry or machine-gun field, and found out later that it was not wanted. I am trying to ascertain if this artillery range is a necessary one.

Mr. McSWAIN. This would not be adequate for an artillery range. The artillery field in North Carolina contains 122 acres.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The report says that it is an addition to the Leon Springs target and maneuver reservation. It says that the War Department continued to occupy the Neutze tract under lease at an annual rental of $650, owing to the fact that the use of this area is necessary as a firing point for artillery. Have they any artillery down there?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that San Antonio is one of the finest cities in the world in which to live, and the officers and their wives want to live there because there is always plenty of society there. That was why the Army moved our cavalry from the Rio Grande, where it was needed to protect us from border raiders, to the East, where we have no need for it. They wanted to be near high society.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am with the gentleman from Texas, but I want to say that Camp Marfa was not deserted for that reason; those troops went to Kentucky.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; so as to be near the big cities.

Mr. JENKINS. What has the abandonment of Camp Marfa to do with this?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It has nothing to do with this. The truth is this land has been condemned by the Government in the United States district court, and judgment awarded the owners, and we are paying interest on the judgment.

Mr. BLANTON. Moving our cavalry has this to do with it. They were moved from the Rio Grande without any excuse or justification whatever, and I merely wanted to give notice to the Army that sooner or later they are going to be forced to return there, hence they had better keep their property there intact.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman points out that this is a large concentration of our land forces.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is all right. I think we would save a great deal if we did concentrate in four or five points rather than have these sparsely located small posts and garrisons.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in addition to the sum of $15,000 authorized by the act of January 12, 1929, to be appropriated for the acquisition by the Secretary of War in the vicinity of and for use in connection with the present military reservation at Camp Bullis, Tex., and which was appropriated in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1931, there is authorized to be appropriated for the same purpose, to meet the judgment in condemnation proceedings, an additional sum of not to exceed $6,400, together with such amount as may be necessary to pay interest.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RESCINDING CERTAIN NEW AIR MAIL CONTRACTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Resolution 359, to rescind certain new air mail contracts, and so forth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes to explain the resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, some time ago the House authorized the Post Office Committee to make an investigation of all postal facilities. One of those investigated was air mail. We have gone into this question very extensively, and we are ready now to make our report. Along about the latter part of January information reached us that the Postmaster General was going to make a number of changes in the air mail map, that he contemplated extending a number of lines, and that he intended to create a number of new lines. We believed that it was the wrong time to make such changes. We had made a complete survey of all the air mail lines and were ready to make our recommendations based on lines then in existence.

The Appropriations Committee of the House was considering appropriations based on the then existing lines, and our committee, believing it was inopportune for an administration in its closing days to radically change the air mail service, reported out this resolution. We then asked the Postmaster General to leave the service as it was at least for the time being. It was not the proper thing to do just at this time. Some there are who even suggest that it was a discourteous act, unfair to the incoming administration. But he put his program through and for good measure he put a number of new ocean mail contracts into effect, one from Galveston to the Orient, an ocean mail contract that could not possibly carry much mail, for if mail was to be expedited, such mail to the Orient would leave from the Pacific coast rather than from Galveston to go via the Panama Canal.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand a bid is being opened to-day for the awarding of a mail contract from Norfolk, Va., up along the Atlantic coast and then over to Europe.

Mr. MEAD. I believe the gentleman is correct. The present administration is doing everything possible to extend both the air mail and the ocean mail systems, which will increase the subsidies.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Does he expect that this resolution would have any legal consequence if it were passed? If the Postmaster General has a right to do something and has done it, how can anything we pass be other than just a simple request that he rescind?

Mr. MEAD. The members of the Post Office Committee went on record in opposition to the action taken by the Postmaster General when we adopted this resolution. We felt it was the only course for us to pursue. The next Postmaster General, by reason of the authority he possesses, backed up by the action of the Post Office Committee, may be able to make changes that will eliminate much of the harm that has been done.

Mr. JENKINS. Then the gentleman agrees that there can not be any legislative effect to this if we should pass it. And I shall object.

Mr. MEAD. Suppose the House and the Senate should pass this resolution, or a similar resolution. Does the gentleman believe the Postmaster General would overrule the Congress? It is an expression by which our committee seeks to inform the Postmaster General that he is exceeding his powers. These changes should not be made until the appropriation for air mail is decided upon and until our committee has made its report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object and call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] to the fact that if he should introduce a resolution or amend this resolution providing that from the date of the enactment of the resolution no further contract or certificate should be made or issued I am sure that he would find a sympathetic response in the House; but the gentleman's resolution does more than that. It asks to rescind existing contracts. The gentleman says that the passage of a resolution of this kind would be conclusive on the Postmaster General. The gentleman knows that we wrote a prohibitory provision in one of the appropriation bills in respect to a certain contract and the Postmaster General disregarded it. I suggest in a spirit of friendliness that if the gentleman will revise his resolution to prevent the issuance of certificates or the making of contracts after its passage I think the House would respond to it.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Where negotiations have been entered into for needed extensions, do I understand that this resolution would express the opinion of the House and the Congress that they should not be entered into?

Mr. MEAD. Where they are contrary to law and not in the public interest. That is all.

Mr. LEAVITT. Who would decide whether they were in the public interest or not?

Mr. MEAD. The Postmaster General, under the terms of the Watrous Act.

Mr. LEAVITT. I would have to object if this would interfere with the establishing of what I consider an extremely important program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MORRISTOWN NATIONAL HISTORIC PARK, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14302, to provide for the creation of the Morristown National Historical Park in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over. There has been a rule introduced for its consideration.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman not reserve his objection for a moment? It will only take a short time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there are 40 bills here where there is no rule at all. This matter will be considered in due course.

I object to the present consideration, Mr. Speaker.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT MANGUM, OKLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14489, relating to the construction of a Federal building at Mangum, Okla.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, this is the bill I referred to a few moments ago, which I got confused with another Federal building bill. I see there is a letter here to the gentleman from Oklahoma by the assistant chief clerk, with reference to the attitude of the Department of Justice. How does the assistant chief clerk come to speak for the department?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, I will give a brief history of the legislation and the gentleman can understand the facts in connection therewith. A bill was passed through this body allocating eighty or ninety thousand dollars to be used in the construction of a post office at Mangum, Okla. That bill contemplated the purchasing of a site. The citizens of that city afterwards decided they would be willing to condemn and donate a portion of their large public square for this purpose, thus eliminating or avoiding the necessity for purchasing a site, and making the amount for that purchase available to put an extra room on the top of the post-office building. I took it up with the Treasury Department. They thought well of it and instructed the architect to draw new plans.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have all of that. That is clear. What I want to know is, does the Federal court hold sessions in this city?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Where do they hold their sessions now?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. In the courthouse.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why did we not have the benefit of the usual communication from the Department of Justice instead of a communication from the chief clerk?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. The Assistant Attorney General of the Department of Justice instructed this person to look over the plans and see whether or not they were satisfactory. When he did that, this is the letter that was sent to me. I presented this letter to the committee, and the committee unanimously authorized this bill to be reported.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman assures us that the Federal court does hold sessions in this city?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And at the present time there is no Federal building there?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the construction of the Federal building at Mangum, Okla., authorized by the act of February 16, 1931 (Doc. No. 788, 71st Cong.), the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide facilities for the holding of terms of the District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 546, TITLE 34, OF THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 13026, to amend section 546, title 34, of the United States Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, who drew up this bill? The Navy Department drew it, did it not?

Mr. BLAND. No. I had the honor of preparing the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I suggest the gentleman amends a provision of the United States Code? The United States Code is prima facie evidence of the law. I have prepared an amendment of the original statute, and if the gentleman would offer that, it would answer the purpose.

Mr. BLAND. I will be very glad to offer the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 546, title 34, of the United States Code, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 546. Loan or gift of condemned or obsolete property: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to lend or give to soldiers' monument associations, posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, posts of the American Legion, and other recognized war veteran associations, State museums and incorporated museums operated and maintained for educational purpose only, whose charter denies them the right to operate for profit, and municipal corporations condemned or obsolete ordnance, guns, projectiles, books, manuscripts, works of art, drawings, plans, models, and other condemned or obsolete material which may not be needed in the service of the Navy Department. Such loan or gift shall be made subject to rules and regulations covering the same, and the Government shall be at no expense in connection with any such loan or gift."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLAND: On page 1, line 3, after the word "That" insert "chapter 231 of the code of May 22, 1896 (29 Stat. 133)," and after the word "Code," in said line, insert a parenthesis.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment, after the numeral "34," strike out the word "Code" and insert "U. S. C."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 1, line 3, after the numerals "34," strike out the word "Code" and insert "U. S. C."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "To amend section 546, title 34, U. S. C."

MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GERMANY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12328, to authorize the assignment of awards entered by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when the bill for the return of property and for the settlement of claims was before the House, if I remember correctly, there was quite a long discussion as to the matter of assignments, and the bill specifically provided against assignments and provided that payments could be made only to the original claimants.

The report states, and I suppose it is quite correct, that most of the small claims have been paid. What I fear is that there may be a peddling of these claims if we permit assignments in these times. Of course, it is presumed that the large claimants can protect their own interests.

Can the gentleman from Virginia tell us the necessity of this bill at the present time?

Mr. WOODRUM. Originally there were about 7,000 claims aggregating millions of dollars. It ran into quite a considerable sum. All claims under $100,000 have now been paid in full. There are something less than 350 claims left out of the original 7,000; and they are all very large claims. Some of these claimants have received partial payments.

The Treasury Department, I may say to the gentleman from New York, has gone into the matter a number of times and for a while resisted any effort to change this law until they were fully advised that all the small claimants had been paid, and that the large claimants were able to protect themselves. Under present economic conditions they may be able to liquidate some of these claims to some extent at this time, and that is the reason the Treasury Department made this recommendation.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. Do the hearings disclose that anything unfair was being done, that anybody was trying to take advantage of the bankruptcy laws, or anything of that sort?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not at all.

Mr. JENKINS. Or whether this would enable some of the larger ones to squeeze out the smaller ones?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Treasury Department absolutely satisfied themselves that it would enable some of these claim holders to settle their claims at a time when they needed to take advantage of all the assets they had.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I have read the bill and the report. I find no indication that it has been submitted to the State Department for its consideration. The State Department has the administration of the Mixed Claims Commission. It is not for the Treasury Department to pass on this.

Mr. WOODRUM. But the Treasury Department has always exercised jurisdiction over the payment of these claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. They only exercised jurisdiction as the last alternative. The State Department has full jurisdiction over the administration of the Mixed Claims Commission.

Mr. WOODRUM. But the inhibition against the assignment of claims was directed by the Treasury Department because it made the payments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course it might be said the Treasury Department had jurisdiction over every department in making payments out of the Treasury. The Treasury Department makes payments, but this, as a matter of administrative policy should have been submitted to the State Department.

Has the gentleman any information as to what attitude the State Department takes toward this legislation?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; because it has not been submitted to them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill should really have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and not to the Committee on Ways and Means. It is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; the Committee on Ways and Means reported out the bill. I remember we debated it for several days.

Mr. STAFFORD. The original authorization of the creation of the Mixed Claims Commission came from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is a matter that relates to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WOODRUM. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am sure the Committee on Ways and Means reported it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLAND). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (g) of section 2 of the settlement of war claims act of 1928 is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(5) In the case of an assignment of an award, or an assignbent (prior to the making of the award) of the claim in respect of which the award was made, by any such person, made in writing, duly acknowledged, and filed with the application for payment, such payment shall be made to the assignee."

SEC. 2. Subsection (k) of section 3 of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(5) In the case of an assignment of an award, or an assignment (prior to the making of the award) of the claim in respect of which the award was made, by any such person, made in writing, duly acknowledged and filed with the application for payment, such payment shall be made to the assignee."

SEC. 3. Subsection (f) of section 5 and subsection (h) of section 6 of such act are hereby amended by striking out "(4)" where it occurs in such subsections and inserting in lieu thereof "(5)."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the assignment of awards entered by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, the Tripartite Claims Commission, and the war claims arbiter."

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7432, to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to delegate certain of its powers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is a departure here from the established practice. Perhaps it is meritorious. It is sought to allocate to mere employees the power of hearing and determination.

I fully realize the crowded condition of the work before the Interstate Commerce Commission, yet there is a tendency on the part of the courts, as exemplified years back in the Court of Claims, in the Supreme Court of the United States, and other courts, to have subordinates do the real work of ascertainment and determination.

I would like to have some explanation of this bill, even though the Interstate Commerce Commission has recommended it in several of their reports.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman having been a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for years understands the way the commission works. He understands, of course, that the years have come and gone since he was a member of that committee, and by close contact with the Interstate Commerce Commission that their work has grown by leaps and bounds. Many small matters come up for consideration in the commission. A few years ago we passed a law giving them the right to delegate this power to a section of the commission not less than three. We thought that would relieve the calendar, but it has not done so.

This bill provides for the delegation of authority in certain classes of cases to one commissioner or to a board of employees of the commission. As is set forth in the report there are little disputes about demurrage; there are little disputes about freight, and so forth, and so forth. We believe if power to handle these cases were delegated to one commissioner or a board of employees of the commission having to do with the particular subject matter that the parties involved could get together and compromise the matter.

Furthermore, when this authority is delegated to one commissioner, or when it is delegated to a board of employees in the commission, it is not final if anyone objects. If any party litigant to a proceeding makes the objection, then the full commission must consider the entire matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to a modification of the law delegating the investigation to one commissioner or perhaps to a board of employees, but this bill goes further than that. It allows one employee, no matter who he may be, to have full authority to investigate and determine. I think it should be a board of employees if we are going to delegate this investigational authority to these subalterns.

Mr. RAYBURN. There may be an occasion arise 1,000 miles from Washington, a most insignificant case, where they could send one man out there to get the information instead of sending a board of three or four or half a dozen. This would save money and would save time and the report of the employee delegated, if it were not agreed to by all the parties, would be referred to the commission or to a division of the commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under existing practice, is it not customary for the commission to delegate investigational affairs to one examiner who reports back to the commission?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not that existing practice meet the condition?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; it would not, because the examiner usually goes into rate matters. They go off and hold hearings for a month at Dallas, Tex., or Houston, Tex., or Los Angeles, Calif., on very vital matters.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do not limit it to Texas. They also go to Milwaukee and various other cities.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; and the examiner does not have any final authority to make an order. He develops the case and reports to the commission.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that there is no administrative or discretionary power delegated here? This is just fact-finding. Is not that all this bill does?

Mr. STAFFORD. It does more than that.

Mr. RAYBURN. There is discretion because they make a finding and when the finding is made it becomes the order of the commission unless complaint is filed or unless all parties agree to the finding of this employee. In such event it goes to the commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that explanation, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 17 of the interstate commerce act, as amended (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 17), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(6) The commission is hereby authorized by its order to assign or refer any portion or class of its work, business, or functions arising under this or any other act of Congress or referred to it by Congress, or either branch thereof, to an individual commissioner, or to a board composed of an employee or employees of the commission, to be designated by such order, for action thereon, and by its order at any time to amend, modify, supplement, or rescind any such assignment or reference: Provided, however, That this authority shall not extend to investigations instituted upon the commission's own motion nor, without the consent of the parties thereto, to contested proceedings involving the taking of testimony at public hearings. All such orders shall take effect forthwith and remain in effect until otherwise ordered by the commission. In case of the absence or inability for any other reason to act of any such individual commissioner or employee designated to serve upon any such board, the chairman of the commission may designate another commissioner or employee, as the case may be, to serve temporarily until the commission shall otherwise order. In conformity with and subject to the order or orders of the commission in the premises, any such individual commissioner, or board acting by a majority thereof, shall have power and authority to hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any of said work, business, or functions so assigned or referred to him or it for action by the commission and in respect thereof shall have all the jurisdiction and powers now or then conferred by law upon the commission and be subject to the same duties and obligations. Any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by any such individual commissioner or board in respect of any matters so assigned or referred shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made or taken by the commission. Any party affected by any order, decision, or report of any such individual commissioner or board may file a petition for reconsideration or for rehearing by the commission or a division thereof and every such petition shall be passed upon by the commission or a division thereof. Any action by a division upon such a petition shall itself be subject to reconsideration by the commission, as provided in section 16a of this act (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 16a), and in paragraph (4) of this section. The commission may, as provided in paragraph (1) of this section, make and amend rules for the conduct of proceedings before such individual commissioner or board and for the rehearing of such action before a division of the commission or the commission. The secretary and seal of the commission shall be the secretary and seal of such individual commissioner or board."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "or class."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NAVY RATION

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to calendar No. 523, the bill (H. R. 14438) to effect needed changes in the Navy ration. A certain amendment has been agreed to that will correct the objection, and the bill will save the Government about $75,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it was stated from the Speaker's rostrum on the last occasion of calling the calendar that it is a rather questionable practice to return to a bill after it has once been passed on the calendar.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. This will save the Government at least $75,000, and we are just trying to cooperate in this way.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I made the original objection, and after having a consultation with those interested in the subject, we agreed to eliminate two sections and to make certain changes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Wait a minute before you talk about any agreement. Let us in on that agreement.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ALLOTMENTS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14059, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior in behalf of Indians to purchase the allotments of deceased Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that both the Secretary of the Interior and the Director of the Budget think that on account of the financial condition of the Treasury this bill should be postponed for future consideration, I object.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman reserve the objection?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I reserve it for an explanation.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has stated that his objection to the bill is on the basis of the statement of the Bureau of the Budget and the Secretary of the Interior. I can state to the gentleman on my own responsibility that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs consider this the most fundamental Indian bill that has been before us at this session of Congress.

The Assistant Commissioner was before the committee and expressed their judgment and has told me personally that the statement made in the last paragraph of the report is entirely due to the standing rule that they must report against expenditures of any kind at this time.

The reason this is the most fundamental piece of Indian legislation that has been before us this session is this: On nearly all of the reservations land has been pretty largely allotted, and proper provision has not been made for succeeding generations of Indian children who have come along. The Indians to whom the lands have been allotted in many cases have died with numerous heirs. The land is in a confused state of inheritance and there is no way, under ordinary conditions, to dispose of it for the benefit of the estate except to sell it. The Indian is hardly ever in a position to raise the money to buy it. The result is that it often goes into the hands of white people and the Indians are gradually, on many reservations, being deprived of these lands through the working out of the present law.

All this bill would do would be to authorize the setting up of a revolving fund upon which the Indians who live on the reservations and who must have one-quarter of Indian blood and who need to be enabled to live among their own people may draw and have from 5 to 20 years to pay back to the Government to buy this land instead of having it pass out of their hands. The Indians have no other means of credit.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I understand that ultimately it does not cost the Treasury anything.

Mr. LEAVITT. It is a revolving fund.

Mr. PETTENGILL. How is the Treasury secured?

Mr. LEAVITT. By the land itself. The Indian, as the gentleman knows, has no access to credit of any kind. He is a ward of the Government, and in order to enable him to buy land we set up this revolving fund. He thus becomes self-supporting and ceases to be a burden on the Government. That is the proposition, and having been connected with Indian affairs and given them a great deal of study for years, I consider this the most fundamental piece of Indian legislation that has been before Congress this year.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What will be the cost?

Mr. LEAVITT. The statement made in the report by the assistant commissioner is that for this fiscal year there would be no appropriation at all but only a study. Then for the next fiscal year not over $100,000, and so this fund may be built up to say $500,000. It would revolve and finally come back into the Treasury after a number of years.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What hardship would ensue if the bill is not passed now?

Mr. LEAVITT. The hardship would be that human beings die and this problem accumulates. If the bill is enacted now the incoming Indian administration can begin to study this question. That will take a year, and the next fiscal year the request would come in for an appropriation. Then it would be a small appropriation, but that would revolve and go into a fund.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. This is going to cost eventually $500,000.

Mr. LEAVITT. It is a revolving fund that would come back into the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. But eventually it will cost $500,000.

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I object. I want to save that $500,000.

EXTENDING TEMPORARY RELIEF OF WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 14432, a bill to extend temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLAND). Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Congress has not heretofore taken action to defer action on the irrigation projects for the last half of 1932 and for the full year of 1933, and for the time being I ask unanimous consent that this go over without prejudice.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's statement is not quite accurate. Congress has passed legislation that defers these payments, not including the period that is in this bill, but making some deferment. But the Senate has passed a bill that covers it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think I am accurate when I said that the Congress has not yet taken any action toward the deferment of maintenance charges for the last half of 1932.

Mr. LEAVITT. No; the gentleman is not quite accurate. The Senate has passed such a resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the Congress has not passed it. I am fully aware of the fact that the resolution has passed the Senate and that a rule has been adopted for the consideration of the Chavez bill by the House, but I still insist that my statement was correct that Congress has not yet taken any action toward the deferment of the maintenance and construction charges for the last half of 1932 and for the year 1933.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There are many Americans just now who live in districts with water charges of $20 an acre against them. It is eating them up. Why should we grant relief here, when you do not grant general relief to all the people affected in that way.

Mr. LEAVITT. This applies to every person on Indian reservations.

Mr. BLANTON. In particular water projects.

Mr. LEAVITT. No; to all of them that are on Indian reservations. If the gentleman's friends are on a Federal reclamation project——

Mr. BLANTON. Unfortunately they are not. If they were on a Federal project, these gentlemen from the West, who get so many hand-outs would be taking care of them along with the remainder of those Government-project people, but unfortunately they are in a private project where the money has to come out of their own pockets.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the time being I object.

EXCLUDING CERTAIN TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES FROM OPERATION OF THE ECONOMY ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution 547, to exclude certain temporary employees from the operation of the economy act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have no disagreement with the bill where it provides that those who shovel snow shall be allowed the benefit of this provision, but is it not a fact that if you extend that same provision to those who handle the mail, you will have the strange situation of paying more to a temporary employee than to a regular one?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, they got 65 cents an hour for a few hours' time.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this employment was undertaken at a stated sum.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This applies only to temporary Christmas help. There was nobody in my station in New York who knew that this deduction would be made at the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. But they undertook the employment at a certain schedule of pay.

Mr. McCORMACK. And did not get it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, they got it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no. These men are employed for two or three or four days and a week at the most. They are not the men who are on the temporary roll of the post office throughout the year, who are called in from day to day for several hours or two hours work each day. These are additional help necessary as a result of the extraordinary increase in the mail at Christmas time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not seeking to object to any schedule of pay for those who are to be employed for future holiday seasons, but I only seek to object to an increase of pay to those who have already rendered service under a certain schedule of pay.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know the conditions in my city. I know that these men were employed and were engaged at a certain price per hour, and that the officials did not know or did not expect at the time that the deduction would be made. That is all there is to it.

Mr. McCORMACK. The money was appropriated for the full amount. I am going to offer an amendment so that there will be no future appropriation. My amendment will strike out, on page 2, in lines 3 and 4, the language—out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount—and insert in lieu thereof—

out of the appropriation from which such employee was paid such reduced amount, a sum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, but it all comes out of the Treasury in the end. That is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. My position is this. I raise no question with reference to those who handle the snow, but does not this bill discriminate and provide that a man on temporary employment will be paid more than the man on regular employment, and thereby we will bring down upon us the condemnation of the man on regular employment, in whom I am very much interested.

Mr. McCORMACK. Unfortunately the man who is working on a per diem in a regular capacity and who during the year receives less than a thousand dollars suffers the 8⅓ per cent deduction.

His per diem pay, if he worked the entire year, would have been in excess of $1,000. He received 8⅓ per cent reduction, whether or not he received during the entire year an amount in excess of $1,000. That is true, but this only applies to a group of men who were called in at Christmas time to work 2 or 3 or 4 days.

Mr. JENKINS. Then we have this situation, have we, that unless this bill is passed we have the strange situation of men having been employed at a certain amount and having to give 8⅓ per cent of it back?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. I withdraw the reservation of objection. What I wanted to do was to clarify the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to providing that the deduction shall not apply in the future, but as to those who were employed in the past, I think it is establishing a bad precedent, and therefore I object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest to my friend, I have the greatest respect for him, but this is one objection which, if the gentleman makes now, he will regret in future years. This is one deserving case.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, do not lecture me, because that does not do any good. If the gentleman has any facts, I will listen to him, but do not lecture me.

Mr. McCORMACK. No one is lecturing the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; the gentleman is lecturing me.

Mr. McCORMACK. They only worked three or four days.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am saying I do not object to having the deduction not apply in the future; but why should we go back now?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There may be some justification for deducting it in the future if the wage is fixed; but these men were employed at a certain rate, and they did not receive that rate, and the officials who employed them were not aware of the fact that the deduction had to be made. It is, in all fairness and justice, recommended by everybody from the Postmaster General down. No one expected to make this deduction.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. As it stands now, there are many people over this country who were given two or three or four days' work who will not get what they expected to get?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What they were engaged for and what they were supposed to be paid by the Postmaster General——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The committee of which I am chairman considered this bill, and we learned that no man was allowed to work in the Postal Service at the Christmas holidays unless he could produce evidence showing that he had dependents. They went in there to work three or four days at a given wage, and just at the time they were to be paid off a telegram came from the Postmaster General saying that the comptroller said, "You must take 8⅓ per cent off." Just imagine such a thing! Deducting 8⅓ per cent of a man's money from the few dollars he was to get.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman who reported this bill is giving me information and not "blah" from the supposed friend of the Postal Service. I withdraw the reservation of objection, and I am not influenced by the lecture of the Irish advocate from Boston. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. I accept the characterization as a compliment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions requiring reductions in compensation contained in Title I of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, shall not apply to additional employees engaged for the purposes of removal of snow in the District of Columbia, and outside the District of Columbia when such removal is at the expense of the United States, or to additional employees of the Post Office Department engaged in handling Christmas mail. In the case of any such employee who, prior to the enactment of this act, has been paid a reduced amount by reason of the application to him of such provisions reducing compensation, there is hereby authorized to be paid to him, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the difference between the amount actually paid to him and the amount he would have been paid for the same work if such provisions had not been applied to him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McCORMACK: On page 2, in lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "out of the appropriation from which such employee was paid such reduced amount, a sum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONNECTING LEE BOULEVARD WITH ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14078, authorizing the Secretary of War to deed certain properties to the State of Virginia in order to connect Lee Boulevard with the Arlington Memorial Bridge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a Senate bill be substituted, which is an identic bill with the bill under consideration, S. 5339.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 5339

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide a connection between the Lee Boulevard and the Arlington Memorial Bridge, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the county of Arlington, State of Virginia, for highway purposes only, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a strip of land through the southerly portion of the Fort Myer Military Reservation necessary for the construction of a connection from the Lee Boulevard to the Arlington Memorial Bridge, consisting of a right of way not more than 100 feet in width, said deed of conveyance to contain a restriction against the construction of buildings, fences, or other structures within 110 feet of the center line of said right of way.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby further authorized to convey to the said county of Arlington for highway purposes only, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a strip of land for a continuous right of way approximately 60 feet in width within and adjacent to the southerly boundary of the Arlington Reservation from the intersection of said reservation line with the northerly line of the right of way to be conveyed under section 1 to the east line of McKinley Street.

SEC. 3. The lands to be so conveyed are approximately as shown on plat numbered 104.2–166 in the files of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

SEC. 4. The deeds of conveyance shall contain a reservation reserving to the United States the right to resume possession and occupy said tracts of land, or any portion thereof, whenever in the judgment of the President an emergency exists that requires the use and appropriation of the same for the public defense, and also a further reservation that the title hereby conveyed shall revert to the United States and all rights hereby granted shall cease and be forfeited, unless the said county of Arlington shall construct the said highway and assume the obligations herein provided within three years from the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 5. Upon the consummation of the conveyance herein authorized to the county of Arlington, State of Virginia, the jurisdiction of the United States over said lands, subject to the conditions and reservations in said deed provided, shall immediately cease and determine and revert in the State of Virginia.

SEC. 6. That if at any time the lands herein authorized to be conveyed to the said county of Arlington, State of Virginia, shall cease to be used for the purposes herein specified, the title in and jurisdiction over the same shall revert to the Government of the United States.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ERECTION OF ONE MARKER FOR CERTAIN CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11947, to authorize the Secretary of War to erect one marker for the graves of 85 Confederate soldiers, buried in the Old Rondo Cemetery in Miller County, Ark., in lieu of separate markers as now authorized by law.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to erect one single marker in Old Rondo Cemetery in Miller County, Ark., in which are buried 85 Confederate soldiers, some unknown, at a cost not exceeding the cost to be represented by 85 separate markers as now authorized by law.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "the cost to be represented by 85 separate markers as now authorized by law" and at the end of the bill insert "$250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NAVAL, MILITARY, AND COAST GUARD ACADEMIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14282, to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon the graduates of the Naval, the Military, and the Coast Guard Academies.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think we do plenty for the boys at these academies. I object.

HEIRS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3508, to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, as amended.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this bill been amended as suggested?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has the full approval of the department.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when any Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made, or may hereafter be made, dies before the expiration of the trust period and before the issuance of a fee-simple patent, without having made a will disposing of said allotment as hereinafter provided, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice and hearing, under such rules as he may prescribe, shall ascertain the legal heirs of such decedent, and his decision thereon shall be final and conclusive. If the Secretary of the Interior decides the heir or heirs of such decedent competent to manage their own affairs, he shall issue to such heir or heirs a patent in fee for the allotment of such decedent; if he shall decide one or more of the heirs to be incompetent, he may, in his discretion, cause such lands to be sold: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that the lands of the decedent are capable of partition to the advantage of the heirs, he may cause the shares of such as are competent, upon their petition, to be set aside and patents in fee to be issued to them therefor. All sales of lands allotted to Indians authorized by this or any other act shall be made under such rules and regulations and upon such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he shall require a deposit of 10 per cent of the purchase price at the time of the sale. Should the purchaser fail to comply with the terms of sale prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the amount so paid shall be forfeited; in case the balance of the purchase price is to be paid on such deferred payments, all payments made, together with all interest paid on such deferred installments, shall be so forfeited for failure to comply with the terms of the sale. All forfeitures shall inure to the benefit of the heirs. Upon payment of the purchase price in full, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be issued to the purchaser patent in fee for such land: Provided, That the proceeds of the sale of inherited lands shall be paid to such heir or heirs as may be competent and held in trust subject to use and expenditure during the trust period for such heir or heirs as may be imcompetent as their respective interests shall appear: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to issue a certificate of competency, upon application therefor, to any Indian, or, in case of his death, to his heirs, to whom a patent in fee containing restrictions on alienation has been or may hereafter be issued, and such certificate shall have the effect of removing the restrictions on alienation contained in such patent: Provided further, That hereafter any United States Indian agent, superintendent, or other disbursing agent of the Indian Service may deposit Indian moneys, individual or tribal, coming into his hands as custodian, in such bank or banks as he may select: Provided, That the bank or banks so selected by him shall first execute to the said disbursing agent a bond with approved surety in such amount as will properly safeguard the funds to be deposited. Such bonds shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "That" and insert in lieu thereof the word "That" preceded by a quotation mark.

Page 3, line 23, strike out the word "interior" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Interior" followed by a quotation mark.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TEXAS CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

The Clerk called the next House joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 596, authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Texas centennial celebration, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will state the grounds for my objection. It has virtually been agreed in the House that we shall not undertake any expenditure in these pressing times for expositions and the like. This will involve a considerable expenditure by the National Government by the mere invitation of the President to the foreign governments to participate. The exposition is in 1936.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. This is in recognition of a Republic and not of a State. It is the centennial commemoration of the one hundredth birthday of a Republic.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does it cost any money?

Mr. BLANTON. Not a cent.

Mr. LEAVITT. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] if it costs any money now, or will it cost the Government money at a later date.

Mr. BLANTON. It is going to cost the State of Texas money.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will it cost the Government of the United States money? I ask that the gentleman answer me as he insisted that I answer him.

Mr. BLANTON. This resolution does not cost the Government anything.

Mr. KLEBERG. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will inform the gentleman, for I happen to be the author of the resolution.

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes; because the gentleman's colleague does not know anything about it.

Mr. BLANTON. I told the gentleman it does not cost the Government anything.

Mr. KLEBERG. This resolution does not obligate the Government of the United States to any expenditure in connection with the Texas centennial, nor will it hereafter be obligated other than for suitable representation thereat.

Now, I may say to my colleague that it is important to the State of Texas that we gain the advantage of the passage of this resolution at the earliest possible opportunity. There are two reasons for this. The first reason is that the State of Texas happens to be the second largest exporting State in the Union. It follows New York. The earlier we get the publicity abroad attendant upon this resolution, the better will be the results in so far as our trade is concerned. The next reason is that we have a number of centennials, or a number of large shows and expositions, coming over the entire world. We are anxious to go on record to forestall any of these expositions falling in the way of this one.

Let me say to my colleague also that the State of Texas is celebrating, you might say, its birth, its real infusion with American blood, the date of its birth as a republic, which enabled it to come in 10 years later as one of the great fraternity of States.

The resolution carries a provision that until $500,000 is raised by the State of Texas this proclamation shall not issue. It requires considerable time to raise that much money under present conditions The legislature is now in session.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I notice the gentleman is flanked on one side by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] and on the other side by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. This is a formidable combination. I do not see how the gentleman from Wisconsin can resist this combination.

Mr. STAFFORD. If conditions improve, as we hope they will, there will be no question of having a centennial to commemorate this event, but for the time being I shall object.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. We must consider these bills on the calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am merely asking the gentleman to kindly withhold his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it for a minute, but we have some 30 bills yet to consider.

Mr. KLEBERG. But this is a very important matter to the State of Texas.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know. I have set forth my reasons for objecting.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman withhold his objection to permit me to make one further statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KLEBERG. It seems to me there is no necessity for the exhibition of any fears at the present time that it will cost the Government anything. The Congress certainly has the intestinal fortitude to say "no" if that last recourse becomes necessary. But there are two considerations: First, $500,000 must be raised before the proclamation can be issued, and then the centennial is not to be held until 1936. I am sure the gentleman would not object for the sole purpose of preventing a petition for a laudable purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT BOCA CHICA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14411, to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are a number of bridge bills on the calendar to-day. This bill is not objected to by the department. Some of the bills on the calendar to-day are for municipalities to construct bridges. Other bills provide for corporations made up of citizens to construct the bridges. The Members say that the request for the extension of time is due to negotiations that they are having at the present time with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with a view to getting some money to take care of what they call self-liquidating projects. I am not going to prevent anybody from getting a job if he can, and having faith in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation not to lend money for the construction of any bridge until after a thorough investigation is made, I am not going to object to the bills. In one instance the money, over $600,000, has been advanced by the corporation. It will mean work for the unemployed, and further means no bonds will be sold to the public. Unless the Reconstruction Finance Corporation finds the projects will be self-liquidating no bridges will be constructed. Of that I am sure.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, I will, so it is all right.

There being no objection, the clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved June 10, 1932, to be built by the Boca Chica Bridge Co., across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from June 10, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend the title.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex."

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR BATON ROUGE, LA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14460, to extend the the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.

There being no objection, the clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La., authorized to be built by the Louisiana Highway Commission, and the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., and the Louisiana & Arkansas Railway Co., by an act of Congress approved February 10, 1932, are hereby extended two and four years, respectively, from February 10, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, strike out "1932" and insert "1933."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE LITTLE RIVER, NEAR MORRIS FERRY, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14480, to extend the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a railroad bridge across the Little River at or near Morris Ferry, Ark.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a railroad bridge across the Little River at or near Morris Ferry, Ark., authorized to be reconstructed, maintained, and operated by the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Co., its successors, and assigns, by an act of Congress approved June 23, 1930, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from June 23, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14500, to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., authorized to be built by the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved May 22, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 2, 1929, and June 30, 1930, is hereby further extended two years from May 22, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ELK RIVER BETWEEN LAUDERDALE AND LIMESTONE COUNTIES, ALA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14602, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Alabama to construct a bridge across Elk River between Lauderdale and Limestone Counties, Ala.," approved February 16, 1928.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 16, 1928, granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Alabama to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Elk River, at a point suitable to the interest of navigation on the Athens-Florence Road between Lauderdale and Limestone Counties, in the State of Alabama, be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PACKING OLEOMARGARINE AND ADULTERATED BUTTER IN TINS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 4065, authorizing the packing of oleomargarine and adultered butter in tin and other suitable packages.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). Is there objection?

Mr. BOYLAN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire about this bill. There does not seem to be any statement here that the contents will not poison the poor unfortunate who has to eat this adulterated butter.

Mr. PURNELL. Let me say that this is approved by the Agricultural Department, the Treasury Department, the dairy interests, and everybody else. The fact is, that the industry was not acquainted in 1886 when the act was passed with the use of tin. They were not acquainted with the modern method of packing food, and so it was not included in the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Reading the report of the Department of Agriculture, it says that there appears to be no objection. It does not say that there is no objection. The report seems to be very weak. The Treasury Department says that the department can see no objection to the enactment when considered from the standpoint of revenue.

Mr. SEGER. If my friend, the gentleman from New York, will read the hearings on the bill, he will see that our colleague from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], one of the largest cattle raisers in the country and a member of the Committee on Agriculture, said:

I see no reason to object to this bill. The packing of food products has reached such an advanced stage that certain commodities carrying a high oxygen content are now packed in tin, foods which a few years ago it was believed could not be packed in such manner. For instance, they are now packing chickens and meats with fat content in tins, and there is no question at all in the product as to whether the tin would have a deleterious effect. As a matter of fact it is believed greater cleanliness and sanitation can be obtained by this process.

Mr. PURNELL. That is a fact and it is in the interest of public health.

Mr. SEGER. Let me say further, in the olden days no one really knew what oxygen did to food, but in the last few years research has disclosed the advantage of excluding as much oxygen as possible from many kinds of foods, thereby improving their quality and wholesomeness. The high vacuum process under which this oleomargarine and butter would be packed would prevent contamination.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, relying on the knowledge of the expert farmer from New Jersey, I will withdraw my reservation of an objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, as amended (U. S. C., title 26, secs. 543, 544), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins, tubs, or other wooden, tin-plate, or paper packages, not before used for that purpose, containing, or encased in a manufacturer's package made from any of such materials of, not less than 10 pounds and marked, stamped, and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and all sales made by manufacturers of oleomargarine and wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall be in original stamped packages. Retail dealers in oleomargarine must sell only from original stamped packages, in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds, and shall pack, or cause to be packed, the oleomargarine sold by them in suitable wooden, tin-plate, or paper packages which shall be marked and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe. Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine in any other form than in new wooden, tin-plate, or paper packages as above described, or who packs in any packages any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law shall be fined for each offense not more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not more than two years."

SEC. 2. (a) The eighth paragraph of section 4 of the act of May 9, 1902 (32 Stat. 193, ch. 784), is amended to read as follows:

"That all adulterated butter shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins, tubs, or other wooden, tin-plate, or paper packages not before used for that purpose, containing, or encased in a manufacturer's package made from any of such materials of, not less than 10 pounds, and marked, stamped, and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and all sales made by manufacturers of adulterated butter shall be in original, stamped packages."

(b) The ninth paragraph of such section 4 is amended by adding after the word "wooden" wherever it appears in such paragraph a comma and the word "tin-plate."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

CONGRESS AND THE FARM-MORTGAGE PROBLEM

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion there is no more important subject upon which legislation should be enacted in the closing days of this session than that dealing with both emergency and a long-time program of relief from farm and small-home mortgage indebtedness. Upon invitation of the National Grange I delivered an address over the radio upon this subject on Saturday last, and I request unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing this address in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by myself Saturday, February 18, 1933:

Good friends of the radio audience, the generous reference of Mr. Brenckman to my membership and official connection with the Grange and to my years of service in the House of Representatives and on the Committee on Agriculture is much appreciated, and in return I am happy to acknowledge the constant and constructive assistance of the National Grange and associating farm organizations in the advancement of farm legislation.

In passing it may be of interest to note that during my 12 years' service in the House there have been 73 roll calls upon farm legislation. My record shows 68 favorable and no adverse votes. To these I hope to add one more in support of emergency relief to farm and home owners burdened with mortgage indebtedness.

In this time so generously assigned me by the National Grange I shall do my best to bring an informative and hopeful message upon the subject "Congress and the Farm Mortgage Problem."

At the outset I hasten to assure every listener that Congress is fully appreciative of the crisis rapidly developing in Agriculture caused by the slump in farm prices and the consequent inability of farmers to meet interest charges and payments upon their mortgages and to pay their taxes. Scores of bills have been introduced proposing both emergency and long-time relief. The few remaining days of the present session of Congress will only be sufficient to consider emergency legislation and in consequence this discussion will be limited to that phase of the subject.

Illustration of this emergency legislation is H. R. 14504, introduced by myself. This bill provided emergency relief for borrowers from joint-stock land banks through loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to such banks, upon condition that the annual interest rate to borrowers should be reduced from 6 per cent to 4 per cent and that a moratorium should be granted to such borrowers as might desire. In modified form this bill has been incorporated in Senate 5639, known as the Hull bill which was favorably reported to the Senate this week. It is earnestly hoped that favorable consideration may be given this vitally important measure before the close of the session.

Specifically the Hull bill authorizes and directs the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to owners of mortgages on farms, and on homes not exceeding $8,000 in value. These loans are made to enable such mortgage owners to take care of defaults in payments of interest, principal and unpaid taxes, and upon the further condition that no foreclosure proceedings shall be started for two years, and that the borrower shall not be charged in excess of 4 per cent interest on the advances made.

Owing to the fact that both Federal and joint-stock land banks were set up by act of Congress to care for the farm-mortgage situation, the Hull bill naturally makes special provision to enable these agencies to function in the present emergency. One hundred million dollars is definitely allocated to these banks under the conditions outlined in my bill to which reference has already been made.

The Federal and joint-stock land banks carry about 19 per cent of the total farm mortgages of the country; 81 per cent of such mortgages are therefore held by other agencies, including insurance companies with 23 per cent, commercial banks holding 11 per cent, active and retired farmers 14 per cent, and all other agencies and individuals 23 per cent. Relief is likewise provided for borrowers from these sources through the provisions of the Hull bill, making advances and loans to the holders of such mortgages under such terms and conditions as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may prescribe.

At this point it will be well to emphasize the fact that the Hull bill provides relief to owners of homes in villages and cities where the value does not exceed $8,000. The conditions under which such relief can be given will be worked out by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but are expected to follow as closely as possible the specific regulations set up for the handling of loans to the Federal land banks.

For the benefit of those who do not fully appreciate the critical farm-debt situation it is only necessary to recall the demonstrations of protest attending farm-mortgage sales in many sections of the country. In some instances these demonstrations have doubtless been inspired by arbitrary action on the part of bank receivers and in some cases by unscrupulous persons who have taken advantage of the present situation to acquire mortgages at liberal discounts and have proceeded to foreclosure.

It is positively startling to learn that 42 per cent of all the farms of the United States are mortgaged and that the total of such indebtedness runs to approximately nine and a quarter billion dollars. Other forms of farm indebtedness total approximately $3,000,000,000, making a grand total of $12,000,000,000 of farm debt. Nearly 60 per cent of farm mortgage indebtedness of the country is upon farms located in the 12 North Central States, commonly called the "bread basket" of the country. The total annual interest charge on this mortgage indebtedness at the average rate of 5.8 per cent amounts to $536,000,000. When this staggering amount is added to another $500,000,000 and more of local and State taxation on farms, we get a much clearer understanding of the tragic farm economic situation.

Keeping in mind this gigantic outlay of over a billion dollars for mortgage interest and farm taxation alone, we should also remember the like tragic reduction of the farmers' income due to a slump in farm commodity prices. The total value of farm crops for 1932 is estimated at $5,500,000,000 in contrast with $12,000,000,000 average value during ordinary times. When more than 20 per cent of the total value of all farm products is absorbed by interest and taxes, it is no wonder that demonstrations of protest against mortgage foreclosures have become commonplace. By way of additional emphasis upon the difficulties of the situation it is noted that it would require more than the total hog production of the country, or two and one-half times the total wheat crop for 1932, to pay the farm-mortgage interest charge alone.

If we considered the percentage of these two crops produced upon mortgaged farms only, it would require two and one-third times their hog production and 5.8 times their 1932 wheat crop to balance this interest account.

If the State of Michigan is taken as an illustration of the average farm-mortgage situation in the North Central group of States, it is found that 82,000 of the total of 169,000 farms of the State are mortgaged. The total amount of the State's mortgage indebtedness is $230,000,000, and the annual interest charge thereon is $14,500,000. The extreme in mortgage indebtedness is in Iowa, where the total farm mortgage debt is $1,100,000,000 and the annual interest charge nearly $61,000,000. These comparisons must convince every thoughtful person that there is a real emergency confronting the country in this matter of readjusting the burden of farm mortgage indebtedness.

As I see it, farm prices must be lifted and the burden of interest and taxes reduced if we are to avoid an utter collapse of agriculture. In my opinion, there is no more important question than this immediately confronting the Congress. In a larger sense it is a national problem rather than a farm problem, because it is generally admitted that agriculture is fundamentally important to any permanent prosperity which the country may expect. Hon. L. J. Tabor, master of the National Grange, in a recent statement before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, hit the nail squarely on the head when he said:

"There is a better way to stop foreclosures and protect the interest of farmers than gathering at sheriff's sales in massed groups on the courthouse steps. There is a better way than intimidation, and this better way consists in the enactment of such legislation as is proposed in the bills now pending before this committee."

Emergency legislation is absolutely essential before March 4, and a long-time program is equally vital during the special session soon to be held. The National Grange and associated farm organizations deserve the commendation of every friend of agriculture for the constructive leadership they have shown in this crisis, and now that Senate bill 5639, embodying the essentials of an emergency program, is ready for consideration, every listener who believes that such a program is vitally essential should rally to their support in an effort to secure its speedy enactment into law.

LOANS FROM THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 10824, a bill to aid farmers in obtaining loans from the Federal Farm Loan Board or other governmental agencies.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of aiding the farmers in the county of Osage, State of Oklahoma, to obtain loans on farms and ranches owned by them in said county and State, in accordance with the intention of Congress as heretofore expressed in the laws providing for the granting of loans to farmers throughout the United States, and in conformity with the regulations promulgated thereunder, it is hereby directed that the Federal Farm Loan Board and other governmental agencies authorized to make these loans shall grant to the owners of lands in said Osage County, State of Oklahoma, the right and privilege to obtain these loans in the same manner and in accordance with the regulations now in effect without regard to the interest the said owners may have in the mineral rights which are vested in the Osage Tribe of Indians.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 14, subdivision 3, of the Federal Farm Loan act."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI, BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14378) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall be glad to withhold my objection, but I shall state in this connection in respect to all of these toll-bridge bills that I am following the recommendation of the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture. There is nothing personal concerning the matter in respect to any one bill.

Mr. MILLIGAN. As I understand it, the Agriculture Department and the War Department have both approved this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I am in error. But I find here on page 2 of the report:

The department, therefore, recommends against favorable action on the bill proposing to further extend the times for commencing and completing the bridge authorized to be constructed by the Baton Rouge-Mississippi River Bridge Co.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this bill has been before the Congress after its passage for several years, and it has met with the approval of the Member from New York. The bridging of the Mississippi River is no easy job. It involves an expenditure of possibly $7,000,000 for a combined highway and railway bridge at this point. This bridge, of necessity, must be a combination railroad and highway bridge. It can not be built by the railroads because there is not sufficient railroad traffic there to justify the cost, and it can not be built by the highway department for the same reason. There is a combination, and there will have to be a combination. The whole State of Louisiana is interested in this proposition. The difficulty in crossing the Mississippi River by automobile in low water is very great and very dangerous, and the necessity for a bridge at Baton Rouge is very great. There is a widespread interest in this.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I read further from the report of the Department of Agriculture:

Since the Baton Rouge-Mississippi River Bridge Co. already has been granted two extensions of time for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge under their authorization, and as it appears that any bridge constructed at this point would have to be a combination highway and railroad bridge, it is believed that instead of extending the time as proposed in this bill the authority proposed in H. R. 14377 to the Louisiana Highway Commission and the railroad companies therein named should be granted. One reason for making this suggestion is that if the proposed authority for the Louisiana Highway Commission and the railroad companies that would cooperate with it should not be granted and the extension of time proposed should be granted, then it might be that the holders of the extended authorization would exact compensation from the State and the railroad companies for permitting them to proceed thereunder.

It seems to me that that is irresistible.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, all of the benefits under this franchise in the name of the Baton Rouge-Mississippi Bridge Co. have been transferred to the Louisiana Highway Commission and to the railroads mentioned in the other bill. The company whose name appears in this bill has no interest in the world in it. It is a body of patriotic citizens there who desire to secure a bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Where is H. R. 14377?

Mr. KEMP. That has already passed the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then that is all the gentleman needs.

Mr. KEMP. There may be great difficulty in issuing bonds and providing the necessary finances to build this bridge in the combined name of the Louisiana Highway Commission and the joint railroads.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not at all. If the project is at all feasible, under section 202 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law, they can get the money.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have to proceed. If the gentleman from New York has made up his mind that he is going to object, I think he should say so.

Mr. KEMP. I hope the gentleman will not press his objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, SISTERSVILLE, W. VA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14462) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Sistersville, Tyler County, W. Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. My notation is that ultimately this is to be a free bridge, operated by the West Virginia State Road Commission, and for that reason I thought the general objection might be removed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I read from page 3 of the report from the Department of Agriculture:

When the original bill to authorize the construction of this bridge across the Ohio River by the Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co. was pending, this department submitted to your committee and to the Senate Committee on Commerce adverse reports thereon. It still is the view of the department that a private toll bridge should not be built at this place.

I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I also read from the report on page 2:

Upon completion of construction the Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co. will deliver title to the city of Sistersville, W. Va., and/or the West Virginia State Road Commission with the understanding that upon retirement of the costs of the construction of the project the bridge shall be maintained as a free bridge.

That is in the original bill. Ultimately it is to be a free bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, they have had their opportunity. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTOMAC RIVER AT DAHLGREN, VA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14303, authorizing the George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER, PITTSBURGH-SHARPSBURG, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14584, granting the consent of Congress to the Board of County Commissioners of Allegheny County, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Allegheny River between the city of Pittsburgh and the township of O'Hara and the borough of Sharpsburg, Pa.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Board of County Commissioners of Allegheny County, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, between the city of Pittsburgh and the township of O'Hara and the borough of Sharpsburg, to replace No. 9 Allegheny River Bridge, commonly known as the Highland Park Bridge, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "toll."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Board of County Commissioners of Allegheny County, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River between the city of Pittsburgh and the township of O'Hara and the borough of Sharpsburg, Pa."

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, NEAR CULBERTSON, MONT.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14586, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Culbertson, Mont.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Culbertson, Mont., authorized to be built by the State of Montana and the counties of Roosevelt and Richland, or any of them, by the act of Congress approved July 3, 1930, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 20, 1931, and February 10, 1932, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from July 3, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT TENTH STREET, BETTENDORF, IOWA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14589, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, Iowa.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, Iowa, authorized to be built by B. F. Peek, G. A. Shallberg, and C. I. Josephson, of Moline, Ill.; J. W. Bettendorf, A. J. Russell, and J. L. Hecht, of Bettendorf and Davenport, Iowa, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, by an act of Congress approved May 26, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 2, 1929, June 10, 1930, and April 22, 1932, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from April 22, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, in line 4, strike out "April 22," and insert "May 26."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER BETWEEN NEW ORLEANS AND GRETNA, LA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14601, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La., authorized to be built by George A. Hero and Allen S. Hackett, their successors and assigns, by act of Congress approved March 2, 1927, heretofore extended by act of Congress approved March 6, 1928, and also by act of Congress approved February 19, 1929, and also by act of Congress approved March 6, 1930, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from March 6, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "Act" and insert the word "acts"; page 1, line 9, strike out the words "and also by act of Congress approved"; page 2, line 1, strike out the words "also by act of Congress approved March 6," and insert "June 10"; and on page 2, line 2, after the word "hereby" insert the word "further." Page 2, line 3, after the word "March" strike out the numeral "6" and insert the numeral "2."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE NEAR CEDAR POINT AND DAUPHIN ISLAND, ALA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14657, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala., authorized to be built by the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved February 25, 1927, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 7, 1930, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from February 25, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR FARNAM STREET, OMAHA, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 5370, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge board of trustees by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 20, 1931, and June 9, 1932, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from June 10, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE NEAR RIO GRANDE CITY, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 5445, to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SALE OF SURPLUS COAL FOR DISTRIBUTION TO THE NEEDY

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 526, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to sell surplus coal at nominal prices for distribution to the needy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman mind stating the ground of his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. The report shows that ultimately the Secretary of the Navy would have to replace these stores. I object for the further reason that I do not think any community should be singled out for preferential consideration.

Mr. LEA. This applies to the whole Pacific coast.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the reason against giving special consideration to some locality.

Mr. LEA. None of this coal is needed for reserve at San Francisco. In addition, this coal has greatly deteriorated. It is a mass of powdered coal at the present time. It has been stored there for almost 10 years. It is of no substantial value for ship purposes. It is greatly needed for relief purposes, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have not passed any law granting special relief to a particular locality. This bill grants special relief to a particular locality.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

ESSEX SHORE WAY (INC.)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14537, authorizing Essex Shore Way (Inc.), its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Merrimack River at or near Plum Island Point, Mass.

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. MILLIGAN rose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. There is no report on it from the Roads Bureau.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, that is the request I was going to make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CANYON DE CHELLY NATIONAL MONUMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 13960, to amend the description of land described in section 1 of the act approved February 14, 1931, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to establish the Canyon De Chelly National Monument within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the description of the tract of land described in section 1 of the act approved February 14, 1931, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to establish the Canyon De Chelly National Monument within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz." (U. S. C., title 16, secs. 445, 445b), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"All lands in Del Muerto, De Chelly, and Monument Canyons, and the canyons tributary thereto, and the lands within one-half mile of the rims of the said canyons, situated in unsurveyed townships 4 and 5 north, range 7 west; townships 4, 5, and 6 north, range 8 west; townships 4 and 5 north, range 9 west; and in surveyed townships 4 and 5 north, range 6 west; townships 3, 6, and 7 north, range 7 west; township 6 north, range 9 west; and township 5 north, range 10 west; embracing about 83,840 acres, all of the Navajo meridian, in Arizona."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS' STAMP TAX

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12843, to change the name of the retail liquor dealers' stamp tax in the case of retail drug stores or pharmacies.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, LINCOLNTON, GA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14665, authorizing the State of Georgia to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Savannah River at or near Lincolnton, Ga.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 5659 be considered in lieu of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Georgia be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Lincolnton, Ga., and between Lincolnton, Ga., and McCormick, S. C., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Georgia all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said State of Georgia is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE, RIO GRANDE CITY, TEX.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to House Calendar No. 560.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in explanation let me say this is an international bridge. The committee refers all these matters to the Department of Agriculture, but I do not think the Department of Agriculture should have considered this one because this is an international bridge. This is the reason I ask that we return to it, that we may take it up and pass it. It is a Senate bill and has passed the Senate.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by an act of Congress approved February 15, 1929, to be built by the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved January 31, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from February 15, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend the title.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex."

PRESCRIBING OF MEDICINAL LIQUORS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14395, relating to the prescribing of medicinal liquors.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. A rule has been given by the Rules Committee for the consideration of this bill and we may be able to save time by taking it up now.

Mr. JENKINS. Let it come up under the rule. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ALTERNATE BUDGET FOR THE INDIAN SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14648, providing for an alternate budget for the Indian Service, fiscal year 1935.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman reserve his objection? I am handling this bill for the Indian Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). If the gentleman will allow the Chair to make a brief statement, it is the desire of all concerned to finish the calling of the calendar this afternoon. I think it would expedite matters if gentlemen who intend ultimately to object to consideration of the bill would do so without granting undue opportunity for discussion.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been following religiously the adjuration of the Chair. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CONNERY. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would prefer to hear from the "Indian" from Boston than the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CONNERY. As the gentleman will see from reading the report, we had a representative of the Indian Affairs Bureau before the committee on this matter. This is asked by the Bureau of Indian Affairs and it simply allows them to change their method of reporting to the Budget; and, in fact, gives them more work, but clarifies the different appropriations which are asked for.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report shows that this is going to mean additional expense on the Treasury and for the time being I object.

Mr. LEAVITT. Why does the gentleman say that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because that is shown by the report.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

PRACTICE IN CRIMINAL CASES AFTER VERDICT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4020, to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have the power to prescribe, from time to time, rules of practice and procedure with respect to any or all proceedings after verdict in criminal cases in district courts of the United States, including the district courts of Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Canal Zone, and Virgin Islands, in the Supreme Courts of the District of Columbia, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, in the United States Court for China, in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. The right of appeal shall continue in those cases in which appeals are now authorized by law, but the rules made as herein authorized may prescribe the times for and manner of taking appeals and of preparing records and bills of exceptions and the conditions on which supersedeas or bail may be allowed.

SEC. 3. The Supreme Court may fix the dates when such rules shall take effect and the extent to which they shall apply to proceedings then pending and after they become effective all laws in conflict therewith shall be of no further force.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

UNITED STATES ROANOKE COLONY COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14412, to enable the United States Roanoke Colony Commission to carry out and give effect to certain plans for the comprehensive observance of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of English-speaking civilization in America.

Mr. JENKINS and Mr. BLANTON objected.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11991, to authorize the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury to turn over to State agencies, for use in the enforcement of laws for the protection of migratory birds, forfeited vessels acquired by the Department of Justice and Treasury Department and no longer needed for official use.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

IMPORTATION OF MILK AND CREAM AND MILK AND CREAM PRODUCTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 14569, to regulate the importation of milk and cream and milk and cream products into the United States for the purpose of promoting the dairy industry of the United States and protecting the public health.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

POWER SITES ON THE BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 277, defining and regulating power sites upon the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HIGH-SCHOOL BUILDING, SHANNON COUNTY, S. DAK.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 2340, to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of Shannon County, S. Dak., in the construction of a consolidated high-school building to be available to both white and Indian children.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

TURNING OVER TO THE INDIAN SERVICE VEHICLES, VESSELS, ETC., SEIZED AND FORFEITED

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 3654, an act to authorize turning over to the Indian Service vehicles, vessels, and supplies seized and forfeited for violation of liquor laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

TURNING OVER AMOUNTS DUE INDIANS TO SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN SERVICE

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 4756, to authorize the Veterans' Administration or other Federal agencies to turn over to superintendents of the Indian Service amounts due Indians who are under legal disability or to estates of such deceased Indians.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any money accruing from the Veterans' Administration or other governmental agency to incompetent adult Indians, or minor Indians, who are recognized wards of the Federal Government, for whom no legal guardians or other fiduciaries have been appointed may be paid, in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, or other head of a governmental bureau or agency, having such funds for payment, to such superintendent or other bonded officer of the Indian Service as the Secretary of the Interior shall designate, for the use of such beneficiaries, or to be paid to or used for, the heirs of such deceased beneficiaries, to be handled and accounted for by him with other moneys under his control, in accordance with existing law and the regulations of the Department of the Interior.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DRAINAGE DISTRICT NO. 1, RICHARDSON COUNTY, NEBR.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 4589, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make payment of part of the expenses incurred in securing improvements in drainage projects of drainage district No. 1, Richardson County, Nebr., and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians of the Sac and Fox Reservation, Nebr., whose lands shall be benefited by the project of drainage district No. 1, Richardson County, Nebr., is hereby authorized to pay, from funds now or hereafter on deposit to the credit of the individuals concerned, such Indians' pro rata share of the expenses incurred by landowners interested in such project in the prosecution of a suit in equity to require the said drainage district to enlarge the channel of its system, and to do all things necessary to accommodate the water accumulated therein and to prevent overflows thereof: Provided, That the amounts so paid on behalf of such Indians shall not exceed the rate of $2 per acre for each acre of Indian land benefited nor a total of $600.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL TO AMERICAN DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 237, authorizing the erection in the Department of State Building of a memorial to the American diplomatic and consular officers who while on active duty lost their lives under heroic or tragic circumstances.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to the American Foreign Service Association for the erection of a memorial to the American diplomatic and consular officers who while on active duty lost their lives under heroic or tragic circumstances. The design of the memorial shall be approved and the site in the Department of State Building shall be chosen by the Commission of Fine Arts, and the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said memorial.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TITLE TO SITE FOR PUBLIC BUILDING PROJECT, SUBJECT TO MINERAL RIGHTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 5588), authorizing the acceptance of title to sites for public building projects subject to the reservation of ore and mineral rights.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title to sites and additional land for the construction thereof of public building projects authorized by the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 and subsequent acts, may be acquired subject to the reservation of title in and the right to mine ores and minerals on such sites and lands.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONTROL OF WASHINGTON CITY POST OFFICE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for placing the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Washington City post office in the Secretary of the Treasury.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 1, 1898 (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 285), is hereby amended to give the Secretary of the Treasury exclusive jurisdiction, control, and custody of the Washington City post office and the additions thereto, located at North Capitol Street and Massachusetts Avenue, to be operated and maintained by him the same as other public buildings under his custody and control.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ENACTMENT OF CERTAIN LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

There are certain measures looking to the promotion of economic recovery which have been under consideration by the Congress and are so advanced toward completion or understanding as to seem possible of enactment during the present session.

1. It is most necessary that the principles of the bankruptcy bill which has already been acted upon by the House should be passed by the Senate. The whole object of the bill is to secure orderly cooperation between creditors and debtors, whether farmers, individuals, general corporations, or railroads, for mutual adjustment which will preserve the integrity and continuous operation of business, save the values of good will and the continuation of people in their occupations, and thus avoid destruction of the interest of both parties. This legislation is of the most critical importance in this period of readjustment. Incidentally, such a workable system is highly necessary in order to permit a certain minority of railroads to be so reorganized as to reduce fixed charges and thus relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of drains in prevention of destructive receiverships.

2. The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway treaty should be ratified. It not only will serve a great national purpose but is of importance now also to relieve unemployment by its construction.

3. The enactment by the House of the general principles embodied in the Glass banking bill which has already passed the Senate will greatly contribute to reestablish confidence. It is the first constructive step to remedy the prime weakness of our whole economic life—that is, organization of our credit system.

4. Authority should be given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to increase the amount of loans to States and municipalities for purposes of assistance to distress on the same terms as the present act. While the corporation has funds available which will last until July, it is desirable that they should be supplemented.

5. It seems clear that the domestic allotment plan is wholly unworkable. It will do far greater harm than good to agriculture.

Pending the return of the great commercial countries to the gold standard and the consequent increase in world consumption and thus rise in world prices, it is essential temporarily to reduce farm production so as to remove the back-breaking surpluses of agricultural products and thus to raise agricultural income. The plan proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture some time since for temporary leasing of marginal lands is the least harmful and the most hopeful of all the plans which have been proposed. It has the merit of direct action in reducing supply to demand and thus unquestionably increasing prices; it would affect all farm products; give equal benefits to all farmers; is free of increased bureaucracy; very much less costly; and could be covered by a manufacturers' excise tax of probably 1 to 2 per cent upon these commodities. It would also largely eliminate the tax and interest problems which the Congress is seeking to solve at much greater cost.

6. I earnestly recommend repeal of the procedure of the House of Representatives in publishing loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. These transactions should be open to the fullest degree to the Representatives of the Congress, but their publication in the last few months has led to widespread, mostly innocent misinterpretation, vicious in effect, by depositors and alarmists who do not recognize that such borrowings represent an endeavor of the institution to provide funds needed in service to their respective communities. This publication is destroying the usefulness and effectiveness of the Reconstruction Corporation, is exaggerating fears, and is introducing new elements of grave danger. It is drying up the very sources of credit. The effect of such publication is forcing payment by distressed debtors to replenish bank funds. It is causing the hoarding of currency.

7. While the Congress could not enact such a law during this session, I recommend that it should institute an inquiry with view to the early expansion of the home-loan discount banks into a general mortgage-discount system to be owned cooperatively by banks and mortgage companies (with adequate encouragement of the special activities of building-and-loan associations) and thus to parallel in the field of long-time credit the service of the Federal reserve system for short-time credit. Such a system would relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of many of its functions, would assist in the orderly readjustment of the present situation, and through private initiative would serve many purposes for which the Congress is striving through direct action by the Government.

8. Peace would be promoted and the killing of men checked in various parts of the world to-day if the Executive had the authority to join with other nations in preventing the shipment of arms to such localities. I earnestly recommend that the legislation proposed for this purpose be enacted.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 20, 1933.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMITH of Idaho, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GLOVER, for the day, on account of illness.

To Mr. MONTAGUE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT FROM CERTAIN BILLS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the Committee on Claims, to file a supplemental report on certain bills, a list of which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
